Congressional Quarterly services are primarily for local newspapers and broadcasters at standard rates based on circulation and radio time rates respectively. Services are also available at standard rates to other media of information such as general magazines, group magazines, forums, political publications of all parties, civic groups, educational groups, veterans organizations, trade unions and trade associations. A school and library rate provides no publication or broadcasting rights. Written or oral use, direct or indirect, is strictly reserved for current clients who pay for such rights in their regular editions, broadcasts, newsletters, bulletins or other releases. Congressional Quarterly sources must be indicated if lack of credit jeopardizes any part of copyrights to any of its material.

Congressional Quarterly reserves second and subsequent rights in its services. Hence group publications and others—even though clients—are not entitled without special permission to use back tables and other charts in campaign supplements, handbooks, pamphlets or in any other way that would cause Congressional Quarterly News Features to lose its rights and values in its own material. Non-clients wishing to quote or use material from any of its services must obtain written permission from Congressional Quarterly News Features, 1156 Nineteenth Street, N. W., Washington, 6, D.C.

POLICY STATEMENT

"By providing a link between the local newspaper and Capitol Hill we hope Congressional Quarterly can help to make public opinion the only effective pressure group in the country. Since many citizens other than editors are also interested in Congress, we hope that they too will find Congressional Quarterly an aid to a better understanding of their government.

"Congressional Quarterly presents the facts in as complete, concise and unbiased form as we know how. The editorial comment on the acts and votes of Congress, we leave to our subscribers." Foreword Congressional Quarterly, Vol. 1, 1945—Henrietta and Nelson Poynter, Editors and Publishers.

What Is Congressional Quarterly?

CONGRESSIONAL QUARTERLY is the term used to designate all the services performed by Congressional Quarterly News Features, a private enterprise devoted to producing penetrating articles and complete, authentic reference data on Congress.

These services include: Special stories and features for newspapers; a current reference document on Congress, CQ Weekly Report; and the permanent reference volume, Congressional Quarterly Almanac. Particular attention is given to detailing the stands and activities of lobbyists and pressure groups.

Congressional Quarterly is designed to help newspapermen and the public check on the Congress of the United States, one of the most complex organizations in the world, whose official documents accumulate at the rate of more than a hundred pounds and 15 million words and several feet of bookshelf per year.

Congressional Quarterly is the only news bureau devoting exclusive attention to the United States Congress. Reproduction and quotation rights are reserved for its editorial clients, which include daily newspapers, magazines and publications of trade associations and unions.

Congressional Quarterly's staff organizes and indexes the vast stream of material pouring from Capitol Hill, from day to day, in session and out. Every week it reports to editors in CQ Weekly Report and at the end of the year it compiles the story into Congressional Quarterly Almanac.

CQ is complete in that it summarizes every public bill (except minor administrative and District of Columbia) which is acted upon by either house. Synopsis of debate, all amendments and their disposition is given on all major bills.

Bills introduced, but which were not acted on, are summarized, under the name of the sponsor at the end of each chapter. This provides a quick check on the activities and stands of each individual Congressman.

To make the material easier to use, it is divided into eight broad subjects —Agriculture, Appropriations, Education and Welfare, Foreign Policy, Labor, Military and Veterans, Miscellaneous and Administrative, Taxes and Economic Policy — and every record vote is published in readable charts and listed by states.

Until Congressional Quarterly was published in 1945, there was no way for an editor or an interested citizen to find out about Congress and his own Representative and Senators without great expense and professional research.

EDITORIAL POLICY —Congressional Quarterly is non-partisan and unbiased. It is complete, concise and convenient. To achieve pin-point accuracy only official sources are consulted for Congressional action and microfilm records are kept of lobby source material.

Data is recorded, checked and rechecked. There is constant vigilance from first drafts through proofs and final production. Voting records occasionally differ from those in the official Congressional Record, because many times a Congressman will rise days or weeks after roll call and ask that the Record be corrected to show he voted another way. If there is unanimous consent, and there usually is, the change is made in the text of that day's Record. But no change is made in the original tally of votes until the bound volumes come out a year later. Congressional Quarterly voting charts include all such changes.

In order to condense the facts, but maintain objectivity, Congressional Quarterly devotes proportionately as much space to each issue as the Congress itself devoted to it in committee and on the floor. To give a complete picture of Congressional action without bias, the facts must be included, but not just some of the facts, nor more than the facts. Reporting which includes some measures and omits others can be considered as biased as reporting which twists the facts. Congressional Quarterly therefore achieves objectivity by thorough coverage — no piece of legislation, no matter how small, is left out of the summary — and by proportionate reporting of all actions. There is no highlighting of certain bills, soft-pedaling of others.

CQ ALMANAC is a condensation—a great deal more than a digest—of acts, amendments, committee activities, debate, hearings, investigations, lobbies, party policies, pressures and a record of votes — all recorded votes and many unrecorded votes.

The 1950 volume also gives key votes for Members of the 81st Congress, for the past six sessions—1945-50. The complete record will be found in the back volumes of Congressional Quarterly Almanac on your library shelves. Thus for the first time a six year record is available for Senators up for re-election.

The analysis of each bill passed by the 81st Congress summarizes the recent background of the issue and gives page references in back volumes of Congressional Quarterly for those readers interested in the complete details and past votes.

Congressional Quarterly keeps individual voting records on every member of the House and Senate on every record vote. These blanks for the 79th, 80th and 81st Congresses are available to its subscribers. They are keyed to the back volumes of the Almanac and can be filled in with little trouble or expense.

CQ WEEKLY REPORT tells the story of Congress as it happens day in and day out. It reports regularly on the various phases of Congressional action covering:

Congressional Issues — Regularly, CQ takes an important major question scheduled for early action and details the background, the past votes, the arguments for and against it. It digests the bills involved and presents the stands of Congressmen on both sides.

Pressures on Congress — CQ covers the continuing story of the pressures exerted on Congress. It presents summaries of the legislative programs of the key lobbies. From week to week it reports the stands taken by organizations on specific bills and problems. It lists all lobbyist registrations, salaries and expenditures and analyzes the issues for which lobby money is spent.

The Congressional Week — CQ summarizes the actions of Congress every week. It charts every record vote, summarizes bills acted on and bills introduced. It reports on hearings, committee action and floor debate.

INDEX — Congressional Quarterly every three months, issues a cumulative index, with cross references, to be inserted in the front of the spring - back binder. This provides a quick check for continuing reference as action happens. At the end of the year it is replaced by Congressional Quarterly Almanac, which organizes the material by subject, instead of chronologically, for permanent reference.

Special Features of Congressional Quarterly

Congressional Quarterly presents charts and analyses of Congress not available from any other source. Here are some of its special features, which with the Glossary of Congressional Terms and the explanation of How A Bill Is Passed — both in this volume—will help you to understand some of the technicalities of the operation of the United States Congress.

VOTING CHARTS. When record votes are reported in the Congressional Record, the names are listed without party designation or any indication of where the Member comes from. Congressional Quarterly supplies the party labels, and lists the names of members under each state, with Congressional district numbers for Members of the House of Representatives. At the top of each chart, the vote is broken down to show how Democrats and Republicans divided on each issue. This party breakdown is an important key to what happens in Congress, and the full record could not be obtained anywhere else without hours of work for each session. Moreover, Congressmen correct the Record, days or weeks after a roll call, so that the vote printed in the Record is sometimes incorrect. Congressional Quarterly follows through on these switches and publishes the final complete vote, which does not appear in the Record until it is bound—a year later.

CQ POLL. Many important issues are decided in the House and Senate by voice, teller or division votes on which the Members are not recorded individually. Every week, when Congress is in session, Congressional Quarterly sends out ballots asking the Members of Congress how they stood on the more important questions which were decided by non-record votes. In addition, Members who were absent for important roll calls are asked how they would have voted if they had been present.

KEY VOTES. Consolidated charts showing how each Representative and Senator voted on the most important roll calls of the year. This is for convenience in making a quick check of a Congressman's record, when the reader does not wish to go through all of the votes.

BACK VOTES. In order to provide a quick summary of a Congressman's record, key votes for the 79th, 80th, and 81st Congresses, 1945-1950, are included in this volume. Since it is difficult to find information on major votes before the publication of Congressional Quarterly, the 1949 Almanac also includes the votes of Members of the 81st Congress on key controversial issues from 1919 through 1944.

PARTY UNITY CHARTS. On most controversial issues a majority of Republicans vote one way and a majority of Democrats vote the other, but individual Congressmen often cross party lines. Congressional Quarterly keeps a running record and prints a chart showing how many times each Representative and Senator voted with the majority of his own party when there was a party split, and how often he voted with the opposition. The charts in this volume give party unity percentages for the 79th, 80th and 81st Congresses, 1945-1950.

BIPARTISAN SUPPORT. Congressional Quarterly also compiles percentages of bipartisan support for every Congressman. This shows how he voted on issues where the majority of both parties took the same side. Percentages for the 79th and 80th and 81st are shown on the Bipartisan Support charts in this volume.

ON THE RECORD. These percentages show the number of times a Congressman's stand is known and unknown on all votes of the session. When he is absent for a roll call he can be paired for or against a bill, or announce that if he were present he would have voted for or against the bill. Then Congressional Quarterly polls Members whose stands are unknown to give an additional chance to go "on the record". If a Member does not avail himself of any of these opportunities to make his stand public, a question mark is recorded opposite his name on the CQ voting charts. On-the-record percentages are computed from the number of times a Congressman's position is known or unknown on all record votes during the year.

SENIORITY. A Congressman's committee assignments, chairmanships, office space and a great many other perquisites depend on his seniority in his party. Charts on page 741 show the rank by number of members of the House and Senate in the 82nd Congress for the Democratic and Republican parties. (See Vol. V, p. 22-24 for 81st Congress). Congressmen sworn in on the same date have the same rank. If there is a question of precedence they are then taken in the order of the alphabet.

AGES. The chart of facts and figures on Members of Congress shows their ages as of January 3, 1951, the day the 82nd Congress convened. All figures have been checked with the Congressmen, but when it is impossible to get exact data—some Members won't tell their ages—an approximate age is indicated, arrived at from school graduation dates, army service and other available dates.

PROFESSIONS. This chart also checks off the extra-curricular professions of Members of the 82nd Congress. When they have had two or three careers in different fields this is indicated.

COMMITTEE COVERAGE. Much of the real work of Congress is handled in committee, and is fairly cut and dried by the time it reaches the floor to be reported in the Congressional Record. In covering a new Congress, Congressional Quarterly lists the membership of Senate and House Committees, and gives a brief biography of the chairmen and ranking minority members, including how they have voted in the past on issues of the type which their committees will handle, together with political and economic characteristics of the states and districts they represent. Changes in committee memberships are noted as they occur.

CQ BOX SCORE. A chart of Programs vs. Progress, which shows the stand of Democrats and Republicans on the Administration program and just where it got in Congress. In addition to the chart in the front of this volume showing President Truman's program for the 81st Congress and what was done about it, there is a chart comparing progress of the Administration's program in three Congresses—See Vol. V.

PRESSURE GROUPS. As part of the real story of Congress, Congressional Quarterly reports on the stands of organizations exercising their right of petition to Congress. Their opinions and recommendations on pending measures follow the running story on each bill where lobbies were active.

LOBBY REGISTRATIONS. Congressional Quarterly has listed all lobby registrations since the passage of the Lobbying Act. The list for the first year of operation will be found in Congressional Quarterly Vol. III for 1947 and is continued in 1948, 1949 and this volume. Lobby lists are organized by categories and include organizations represented, individuals registered and salaries.

LOBBY EXPENDITURES. Congressional Quarterly provides the only analysis and complete, cumulative tabulation of lobby expenditures. These are listed by organizations in Congressional Quarterly for 1948-50.

How To Use CQ Almanac

This Almanac sets forth the complete record of the 81st Congress at its second session. In addition, it covers key issues in the first session and in the 79th and 80th Congresses. Since more than two thirds of the Members of the 81st Congress have served before, their past records have been compiled from CQ Almanacs 1945-49, in order to provide a clue to their future votes, and also as a means of matching campaign stands against performance in Congress.

How To Check A Congressman

1. To gauge his activity, locate his name in the index. Here are listed Congressional subjects and actions in which he played a signal role. Turn to the page indicated after each citation beneath his name in the index. A summary of his position on the topic is given there.

2. For a quick survey of his voting on the crucial issues that were before the second session of the 81st Congress, check for his name in the charts entitled "1950 Key Votes" on pages 37-39.

3. For a complete record of his voting in any comprehensive field — such as Labor or Foreign Policy — check the voting charts which follow the Almanac section in each category. CQ lists every record vote for every member of Congress. All voting charts should be checked for a Congressman's complete participation in legislative business.

4. Check the issues and votes on which he did not commit himself, marked ? on the charts. The frequency with which he registered no stand can be determined by reference to his "On the Record" percentage in the chart at the front of the Almanac. This gives the percentage of times his stand is known, whether he voted, paired or announced for or against, or answered the CQ Poll, when he was absent or undeclared on a roll call.

5. Check the bills he introduced. To do this, refer again to the index. Bills he introduced will be listed under his name, together with the general field to which they pertained. For a summary of the bill's purpose, and the name of the committee to which it was referred, turn to the "Bills Introduced" pages following the section on the category indicated, and locate the Congressman's name. His bills accompany it. It is important to recognize that bills introduced by a Congressman may be enacted under another Congressman's name, particularly in the House. This results from the House curb on joint sponsorship of the same bill. Thus, several identical bills are frequently introduced, under different names. The enacted bill usually bears the name of the senior Congressman introducing the measure.

6. Check his party unity. The number of times he supported his political leadership, the number of times he opposed it, and the number of times he hedged by pairing or answering "present" are tabulated on a percentage basis. The tables start on page 59. Ones which follow also indicate his support of bipartisan measures.

7. Check his flexibility. His current record can be compared with his previous record by looking up his votes in previous Congresses.. Key votes. 1919-45 start on page 100 of the 1949 Almanac. Those for 1945-50 start on page 37, this volume. Complete details on a Congressman's actions in the 79th and 80th Congresses and the first session of the 81st Congress will be found in CQ Almanac 1945-49.

8. Finally, evaluate your Congressman's activity in relation to his opportunities. This can often be determined by noting his official position —either in committee or in his party councils. His seniority is also given, as well as data on his age and profession, his campaign expenditures, and the majorities by which he was elected.

How To Check On A Bill

Locate the subject, by name or description, in the index. The topic may be cross-referenced. For example, citations under the broad definition of "HOUSING" include the Housing Act of 1950, which itself has a separate index listing, more detailed. An alternative method of locating the subject is to examine the table of contents, where much broader classifications are given.

Turn to the pages indicated by the index. A complete history of the subject will be found beneath its name. All major bills are compartmentalized in the following sequence:

1. Official number of the bill, and the number of the law it became if the bill was enacted.

2. A short description of the bill or law, including a summary of the course of it's enactment, the date approved, the date it expires, if at all, and the final approving votes.

3. A point-by-point analysis of the measure's provisions.

4. House and Senate votes on the measure, with non-record votes listed if available. Pages are given where detailed voting charts may be found.

5. Analysis of whether the measure jibes with the platform professions of sponsoring political groups. Any Presidential requests or comments relating to the measure are given.

6. The background and past history of the measure, through previous Congresses if necessary. In this case, page numbers of back Almanacs are given for reference.

7. A summary of the bill's progress through the house of origin.

8. Summary of the bill as originally introduced by sponsors.

9. Committee action on the bill, including data on hearings, if held, and amendments and votes affecting the bill while in committee. Majority and minority reports issued when bill was returned to the chamber are summarized.

10. Debates on the bill before passage or rejection in the house of origin. Principal debaters and decisive votes are given.

11. Final action on the bill in the house of origin.

12. Amendments passed.

13. Amendments rejected.

14. Summary of bill's course through chamber to which it was sent by the house of origin.

15. Committee action in this second chamber.

16. Debate

17. Final action.

18. Amendments passed.

19. Amendments rejected.

20. Conference proceedings in the case of differing House and Senate bills on the same subject. Outstanding points in dispute, and how they were reconciled.

21. Law enacted, including the date of the President's signature, and any comments by him on the measure.

22. Lobbying in connection with the legislation involved, including names, techniques, financing, arguments, and expenditures.

In addition, state tables and other relevant data are given on some bills on which they have bearing. Procedures involving vetoed bills are fully described.

How A Bill Is Passed

INTRODUCED — Any House Member may introduce any one of several types of bills and resolutions by handing it to the clerk of the House, or placing it in a box called the hopper. A Senator first gains recognition of the presiding officer to announce the introduction of a bill. In both cases, the bill is numbered, labelled with the sponsor's name, and sent to the Government Printing Office so that copies can be made for subsequent study and action. One bill sometimes carries several Senators' names; this practice does not extend to the House where each bill carries the name of one sponsor only, others frequently filing identical measures.

REFERRED — Following introduction, a bill is referred by the House parliamentarian on the Speaker's order, or by the Senate President to the appropriate committee. Sponsors may indicate their preferences for referral, although custom and chamber rules generally govern this. An exception is the referral of private bills, sent to whatever group is designated by their sponsors. Bills are technically considered "read for the first time" when referred to House committees.

COMMITTEE ACTION — When a bill is before a committee, it is under its sharpest Congressional focus. Its chances for passage are quickly determined — and most bills fall by the legislative roadway. For example, only 12.6 per cent of the 10,797 bills referred to committees in the 80th Congress became law. The others died beneath the press of more urgent measures pending, or through committee disapproval expressed simply by inaction.

Bills which are acted upon by committees, however, involve varying procedures. Committeemen may decide their course in closed or executive session, or they may hold public or private hearings to obtain interested testimony on the bill. An entire committee may officiate, or a subcommittee may investigate the measure, later voting on what its recommendation will be.

The full committee then votes on its recommendation to the House or Senate. This is called reporting the bill. A committee may favor a bill on reception, but amend it before reporting it. In this case, the chamber must approve, alter, or reject the committee amendments before the bill itself can be put to a vote.

COMMITTEE REPORT — Whenever a committee reports a bill with amendments, it explains its reasons, usually with a written statement, called a report, which accompanies the bill. Often committee members opposing a measure issue a dissenting minority report. Sometimes a committee refuses to act on a bill, equivalent to killing it. Then the group can be forced into action only by an organized committee majority insisting on it. Where a majority agrees on bottling up a bill, the measure can only be withdrawn from the group's purview by a discharge petition, requiring signatures of 218 House members on House bills, or by passage of a special resolution in the Senate. Discharge attempts rarely succeed. If a bill is blocked in the House Rules Committee, however, the chairman of the committee originally endorsing the measure can introduce a special discharge resolution. He can call up his bill on the second or fourth Monday 21 days after the discharge resolution is introduced.

After a bill is reported back to the House where it originated, it is placed on the calendar.

DEBATE — A bill is then brought to debate by varying procedures. If a routine measure, it may await the call of the calendar. If it is urgent or important, it can be taken up in the Senate by unanimous consent, or by a majority vote. In the House, precedence is granted if a special rule is secured from the Rules Committee. Such rules often are debated and voted upon in the same fashion as regular bills. They are important because they specify how long the bill may be debated, and whether it may be amended from the floor. If floor amendment is banned, the bill is considered under a so-called gag rule which permits only committee members to alter its language, subject to chamber acceptance. Some of the powers of the House Rules Committee were curtailed by the 81st Congress.

A bill debated under an open rule is fair game for friends and foes. Committee amendments are always taken up first, but may be changed, as may all amendments up to the second degree, i.e., a charged amendment can not be further altered. Substitute motions, however, are permissible.

Duration of debate in the House depends on whether the bill is in the Committee of the Whole or in the House proper. In the former, time for general debate is equally divided between proponents and opponents. At the end of this general discussion, the bill is read "for the second time", section by section, for amendment. Debate on each amendment is limited to five minutes. Persons debating bills considered in the House proper are allowed one hour apiece. This practice is infrequent. Senate debate is usually unlimited. It can be halted only by unanimous consent, or by "cloture" which requires several days time and a two-thirds vote.

VOTED — Voting on bills occurs repeatedly before they are finally approved or rejected, coming in the House both on the rule for the bill, and various amendments to it. Voting on amendments is often a more illuminating test of a bill's support than the final tally. While many votes on subsections of bills are bitterly and closely contested, many of the losers often join the winners on over-all passage of the bill "for the record." Often Congressmen approve final passage of bills after vigorously supporting amendments which would have scuttled them if adopted. The House and Senate vote both by untabulated voice votes, and a recorded roll-call of their names, to which they answer Yea or Nay. The House also uses a rising vote, called a division, and a teller vote, when members file up the center aisle past counters.

After amendments to a bill have been voted upon, a vote may be taken on a motion to recommit the bill to committee. If carried, this vote removes the bill from the chamber's calendar. If unsuccessful, a vote is then held on reading "for the third time". This is generally perfunctory, although opponents of action on a House bill can delay this move by objecting, and asking for a full reading of an engrossed (formal) copy of the bill. One such demand suffices to do this. After the eventual third reading, however, the vote on final passage is taken. The action may be followed by a motion to reconsider the vote just taken, and this motion itself may be followed by a non-debatable, highest - priority move to lay it on the table. Usually the majority voting for the bill's passage votes for the tabling motion, consolidating and safeguarding the previous action. The bill has then been formally passed by the chamber.

TRANSMITTED — After a bill is passed by either chamber, it is stripped of its sponsor's name, and henceforth is known officially by its initialed and numbered title. The approved bill is then sent to the opposite house. This body may then take one of several steps. It may pass the bill as is — accepting the other chamber's amendments. It may send the bill to committee for scrutiny or alteration, or reject the entire bill, advising the opposite house of its actions. Or it may simply ignore the bill submitted while it completes work on its own version of the legislation. Often the opposite chamber makes only minor changes, readily agreed to by the other house, and the measure has taken its penultimate step towards being law. But if the opposite chamber basically alters the bill submitted to it, or lays the measure aside until a differing version is prepared, an intervening step is required, and the separate bill approved by each house is "sent to conference."

CONFERENCE — A conference undertakes to harmonize any House bill and Senate bill which relate to the same subject, but which clash in their respective legislative provisions. The conference is staffed by interested senior members appointed by the presiding officers of the two houses, usually from the committees which managed the bills. This charges the members of one house most familiar with the bill with the duty of maintaining their chamber's position in the face of amending actions by the conferees of the other house. Theoretically conferees are not allowed to write new legislation in reconciling the two bills before them, but this curb is often by-passed. Many bills have been put into a palatable compromise form only after new language was provided by the conferees.

In most cases, the ironing out of difficulties in Senate and House bills requires time particularly on knotty appropriations measures. As a conference proceeds, conferees reconcile their differences, but generally they grant concessions only insofar as they remain sure that the chamber they represent will accept the compromises. Frequently uncertainty over this, or the positive refusal of a chamber to back down on a disputed amendment, will result in an impasse, and the two bills may die in conference, even though each was approved by its sponsoring chamber.

CONFERENCE REPORT — When the conferees have harmonized their bills, they prepare a conference report, explaining why they did — or did not — retain some amendments, and cut out others. The reports are the justifications, to their respective houses, of the actions of the conferees, and the explanations, in document form, must be submitted to each house. The conference report must be approved by each. Generally the compromises reached by the conferees are written into a new bill, which is printed in the conference report. Consequently, approval of the report is approval of the compromise bill worked out. The order of voting on conference reports is regulated. The chamber asking for a conference yields the other chamber the opportunity to vote first.

SIGNED — After a bill has been passed, either in its original form or its compromise form after a conference, it is enrolled on parchment paper and sent around the Capitol for various official signatures. The Secretary of the Senate signs it to certify that the printing is correct. The Speaker of the House then signs it, followed by the Vice-President in his capacity as presiding officer of the Senate.

The parchment document is then sent to the White House, where the President must sign it before it can become law. If he does not sign it within ten days (excluding Sundays) and Congress is in session, the bill becomes law without his signature.

VETOES — However should Congress adjourn before the ten days expire, and the President has failed to sign the measure, it does not become law. This procedure is called the pocket veto. Occasionally a President vetoes a bill, refusing to sign it and returning it to the Congress with a message stating his reasons. The message is sent to the chamber which originated the bill. If no action is taken there on the message, the bill affected dies. Frequently, however, Congress attempts to over-ride the President's veto. This requires a two-thirds vote to make the bill law, "the objections of the President to the contrary notwithstanding". The vote is usually taken the same day the message is received. Debate can precede this vote, with motions permitted to lay the message on the table, postpone action on it, or refer it to committee. If the President's veto is overridden by a two-thirds vote in both houses, the bill affected becomes law. Otherwise it is dead, and can be revived only by reintroduction and routing through the process all bills undergo.

When public bills are finally passed and signed, they lose their bill identification numbers and receive public law numbers.

Glossary of Congressional Terms

ACT — When a bill is passed by either chamber, and sent to the other, its title changes from "A Bill" to "An Act". The sponsor's name is deleted, but the number of the measure, and the initials designating the house of origin, remain unchanged.

ADJOURNMENT SINE DIE — Adjournment without definitely fixing a day for reconvening; literally "adjournment without day." Marks the official end of a Congressional session.

ADJOURNMENT TO A DAY CERTAIN — Adjournment under a motion or resolution which fixes the next time of meeting. Neither house can adjourn for more than three days without the concurrence of the other. A session of Congress is not ended by adjournment to a day certain.

APPEAL — A Congressman's challenge of any ruling or decision arbitrarily made by the presiding officer of the Senate or House. The Congressman appeals to Members of the chamber to override the decision. If carried by a majority vote, the appeal nullifies the chair's ruling.

APPROPRIATION BILL — Grants the actual monies approved by authorization bills, but not necessarily to the total permissible under the ceiling set by the authorization bill. Technically, all appropriations bills should originate in the House, and should await passage of authorization measures before enactment. In practice, however, rules to this effect are sometimes ignored or suspended. In addition to general appropriations bills, there are two specialized types, the deficiency grant and the supplemental grant.

Deficiency Appropriation: An appropriation to cover the difference between an agency's regular appropriation and the amount deemed necessary for it to operate for the full fiscal year. Regular appropriations normally are passed in one fiscal year for the ensuing fiscal year. Deficiency appropriations are for use in the same fiscal year in which they are passed.

Supplemental Appropriation: An appropriation supplemental to the regular appropriation, but not a deficiency. Supplemental appropriations normally are passed after the regular appropriation, but before the fiscal year to which they apply. Deficiencies are passed in the same fiscal year to which they apply. This distinction is not always adhered to.

Recission: An appropriations bill rescinding, or cancelling, funds previously appropriated.

AUTHORIZATION BILL — Authorizes a program, specifies its general aim and conduct, and puts a ceiling on monies that can be used to finance it. Usually enacted before appropriation bill is passed.

Contract Authorizations: Authority in bills permitting the Administration to let contracts or obligate itself to future payments from funds not yet appropriated. Both authorization and appropriations bills may carry this stop-gap feature. The assumption is that funds will be available for payment when contracted debts come due.

BILLS — Most legislative proposals before Congress are in the form of bills, and are designated HR (House of Representatives) or S (Senate) according to the house in which they originate and with a number assigned in the order in which they were introduced, from the beginning of each two-year Congressional term. "Public bills" deal with general questions, and become Public Laws if approved. "Private bills" deal with individual matters such as claims against the government, immigration and naturalization cases, land titles, etc., and become Private Laws if approved.

In addition to bills, other proposals receive similar action by Congress. Such proposals include:

Joint Resolution: A joint resolution, designated H J Res or S J Res, requires the approval of both houses and the signature of the President, just as a bill does, and has the force of law if approved. There is no real difference between a bill and a joint resolution. The latter is generally used in dealing with limited matters, such as a single appropriation for a specific purpose or the granting of Congressional approval for executive actions — for example, international executive agreements. Joint resolutions also are used to propose amendments to the Constitution. These do not require presidential signature but go to the Secretary of State to be transmitted to the states for ratification.

Concurrent Resolution: A concurrent resolution, designated H Con Res or S Con Res, must be passed by both houses but does not require the signature of the President and does not have the force of law. Concurrent resolutions generally are used to make or amend rules applicable to both houses or to express the sentiment of the two houses. A concurrent resolution, for example, is used to fix the time for adjournment of a Congress. It might also be used to convey the congratulations of Congress to another country on the anniversary of its independence.

Resolution: A simple resolution, designated H Res or S Res, deals with matters entirely within the prerogatives of one house or the other. It requires neither passage by the other house nor approval by the President, and does not have the force of law. Most resolutions deal with the rules of one house or the other. They also are used to express the sentiments of a single house, as condolences to the family of a deceased member or, in the Senate, to give "advice" on foreign policy.

Executive Resolution: A Senate resolution dealing with executive business rather than legislative, i. e., with the handling of a treaty or nomination. A motion to discharge a committee from consideration of a nomination is an Executive Resolution, whereas a motion to discharge a committee from consideration of a bill is an ordinary Senate Resolution. The Executive Resolution is not used in the House of Representatives.

Executive Document: A document, usually a treaty, sent to the Senate by the President for consideration or ratification. These are identified for each session of Congress as Executive A, Executive B, etc. They are referred to committee, remaining there until acted upon or withdrawn by the President.

The format of a bill often figures in Congressional action on it. Before becoming a law, a bill is sometimes engrossed, and always enrolled. The distinctions follow:

Engrossed Bill: The final copy of a bill, with the text as amended and certified to by the Clerk of the House or the Secretary of the Senate.

Enrollment of Bill: The act of preparing a bill for the signature of the Speaker of the House and the President of the Senate and for transmission to the President. An enrolled bill is printed on parchment. In modern times, Congress has ignored the warning of Thomas Jefferson and older English parliamentarians that "when the bill is enrolled it is not to be written in paragraphs, but solidly, and all of a piece, that the blanks between the paragraphs may not give room for forgery."

The introduction of a bill, and its referral to an appropriate committee for action, follows the process given in "How a Bill Is Passed", (See Page 11).

Bills Introduced: In the Senate, any number of Senators can join in introducing a single bill. In the House, no more than one Member's name may appear on a bill. The result is that in the House many duplicate bills are introduced, no more than one of which is ever passed. Thus, a member may have his name on a bill introduced but not an identical bill passed. In cases of multiple identical bills introduced, the bill which is selected for passage is usually that sponsored by the chairman of the committee having jurisdiction.

Many bills in reality are committee bills and are introduced under the name of the chairman of the committee or subcommittee as a formality. All appropriation bills fall into this category, as do many other bills, particularly those dealing with complicated, technical subjects. A committee frequently holds hearings on a number of related bills and agrees on a single bill which is then introduced under the chairman's name.

Bills Referred: When introduced, a bill is referred to the committee which has jurisdiction over the bill's subject matter. The appropriate reference for bills is spelled out in the Legislative Reorganization Act of 1946. Bills are referred by the Speaker in the House and the Presiding Officer in the Senate. Appeals may be made from their decisions.

Amendment: Proposal of a Congressman to alter the language or stipulations in a bill or act. It is usually printed, debated, and voted upon in the same manner as a bill.

Enacting Clause: Key phrase in bills saying ". . . therefore be it enacted that . . .". If struck from legislation on motion of opponents, it draws teeth from the measure.

Readings of Bills: Ancient parliamentary law required bills to be read three times before they were passed. This custom is of little modern significance except in rare instances. Normally the bill is considered to have its first reading when it is introduced and printed, by title, in the Congressional Record. Its second reading comes when consideration begins, and its third reading when action has been completed on amendments. Amendments are not in order after a bill has been engrossed and read for the third time, though debate may — and in the Senate frequently does — continue on the bill itself before passage.

Rider: A provision tacked on to a bill, and sometimes originally a separate bill, which its sponsor hopes to get through more easily by including it in other legislation. Riders become law if the bills embodying them do. Riders providing for legislation in appropriations bills are outstanding examples, though technically banned.

BUDGET — The document sent to Congress by the President in January of each year estimating government revenue and expenditures for the ensuing fiscal year and recommending appropriations in detail. Congressional opinion on it is expressed by joint resolution.

Legislative Budget: The opinion of Congress, expressed in a concurrent resolution, on the over-all totals of the federal budget. The resolution is reported jointly by the House and Senate Appropriations Committees, the House Ways and Means Committee, and the Senate Finance Committee. It includes, among other things, the estimated over-all federal receipts and expenditures for the ensuing fiscal year, and a recommendation for the maximum amount to be appropriated for expenditure in the fiscal year, with a reserve for deficiencies. According to the Legislative Reorganization Act of 1946, the legislative budget must be reported by Feb. 14, but this may be postponed by Concurrent Resolution.

CALENDAR — An agenda or list of pending business. There are varying types of calendars in each house.

In the Senate, all legislative matters reported from committee go on a single calendar. They are listed there in order, but may be called up irregularly by the majority leader either by a motion to do so, or by securing the unanimous consent of the Senate. Frequently the minority leader is consulted to assure unanimous consent. Only cloture can limit debate on bills called up out of the order in which they appear on the calendar.

Executive Calendar: This is an additional, non-legislative calendar in the Senate on which Executive Documents such as treaties and nominations are listed.

Call of the Calendar: Senate bills which are not brought up by a motion or a unanimous consent agreement are brought before the Senate for action when the calendar listing them in order is "called." Bills considered in this fashion are usually non-controversial and debate is limited to five minutes on each.

In the House, legislative matters go on a wider variety of calendars.

Union Calendar: Bills which directly or indirectly appropriate money or raise revenue are placed on this calendar according to the date reported from committee.

House Calendar: Public bills which do not directly or indirectly appropriate money or raise revenue.

Consent Calendar: Members of the House may place on this calendar any bill on the Union or House calendar which is non-controversial. Bills on the consent calendar are normally called on the first and third Mondays of each month, but consideration of any bill may be blocked by the objection of any Member. If there are three objections, the bill is stricken from the consent calendar but remains on the Union or House calendar.

Private Calendar: Private bills dealing with individual matters such as claims against the government, immigration and naturalization cases, land titles, etc. Two Members may block a private bill, which then is recommitted to committee.

Discharge Calendar: The calendar to which motions to discharge committees are referred when they have the necessary 218 signatures and before they are acted on.

CALENDAR WEDNESDAY — In the House, on every Wednesday, committees are called in the order in which they appear in Rule X of the House Manual, and may call up any of their bills from the House or the Union Calendar, except bills which are privileged. General debate is limited to two hours. Bills called up from the Union Calendar are considered in Committee of the Whole. Calendar Wednesday is not observed during the last two weeks of a session, and may be dispensed with at other times —by a two-thirds vote. It usually is dispensed with.

CHAMBER — Meeting place for the total membership of either the House or the Senate, as opposed to the respective committee rooms.

CLOTURE — The process by which debate can be limited in the Senate. A motion for cloture can apply to any measure before the Senate except a proposal to change the chamber's rules of procedure. It requires 16 Senators' signatures for introduction, and 64 votes for passage — 2/3 of the Senate membership as required by the Constitution. The motion is voted upon by a yea-nay roll call one hour after the Senate meets on the second day following introduction of the motion. If effected, cloture limits each Senator to one hour of debate.

COMMITTEE — A subdivision either of the House or the Senate which readies legislation for action by the parent chamber. There are several types of committees.

Standing Committee: A group permanently provided for by House or Senate rules. The standing committees at present are specified by the Legislative Reorganization Act of 1946, which broadly defines their respective jurisdictions. Hard-to-classify bills are referred to the appropriate committee at the discretion of the House Speaker or President of the Senate.

Select or Special Committee: A committee set up for a special purpose and a limited time by resolution of either House or Senate. Most special committees are investigative in nature.

Joint Committee: A specified number of members of both House and Senate are named to joint committees to consider many matters of importance. Usually a joint committee is investigative in nature. There are a few standing joint committees such as the Joint Committee on Atomic Energy and the Joint Committee on the Economic Report.

Discharge a Committee: Relieve a committee from jurisdiction over a measure before it. This is a rarely successful procedure, attempted more often in the House than in the Senate. If a committee does not report a bill within 30 days after having the bill referred to it, any member of the House can file a discharge petition. This petition needs the signatures of 218 members. When the required signatures have been obtained, there must be a delay of seven days. Then, on the second and fourth Monday of each month, except during the last six days of a session, any Member who has signed the petition may be recognized to move that the committee be discharged. Debate on the motion to discharge is limited to 20 minutes, and, if the motion is carried, consideration of the bill becomes a matter of high privilege.

Alternatively, a committee chairman whose group's bill is blocked in the House Rules Committee can force its discharge if the House approves a resolution he files for that purpose. He can call up this resolution, however, only after it has matured for 21 days without Rules Committee action on the original blocked bill.

In the Senate, motions to discharge a committee are made in the form of Senate resolutions which can be called up on motion, just as other matters of Senate business.

Discharge Resolution: A special motion any Senator may introduce in that chamber to relieve a committee from jurisdiction over a bill before it, provided that the Senate approves the discharge resolution introduced. In the House, a discharge resolution is introduced by the chairman of a committee whose bill is blocked in the House Rules Committee. If the chairman's resolution is approved by the House, the Rules group loses jurisdiction over the bill before it.

COMMITTEE OF THE WHOLE — The working title of what is formally "The Committee of the Whole House (of Representatives) on the State of of the Union." It is a misnomer because, unlike other committees, it has no fixed membership. It is comprised of any 100 or more House members who participate — on the floor of the chamber — in debating or altering legislation before the body. Such measures, however, must first have passed through the regular committees, and be on the calendar.

Technically, the Committee of the Whole considers only bills directly or indirectly appropriating money, authorizing appropriation, or involving taxes or charges on the public. Actually, the Committee of the Whole may consider any type of measure, and often does. The reason is twofold. Because the Committee of the Whole need number only 100 Congressmen, a quorum is more readily attained, and business is expedited. Secondly, none of the group's votes can be roll calls which require yeas and nays for the record.

The procedures of the Committee of the Whole on any measure are identical. The full House resolves itself into the Committee of the Whole, supplanting the Speaker with a "chairman." The measure is debated or amended, with non-roll call votes as needed. When the Committee completes its action on the measure, it dissolves itself by "rising". The Speaker returns, and the full House hears the erstwhile chairman of the Committee report that group's recommendations. The full House then acts upon them.

CONFERENCE — A meeting between representatives of each house to reconcile differences between the two houses over the provisions of a given bill. The members of the conference committee are appointed by the Speaker and the President of the Senate and are called "managers" for their respective houses. Conference reports must be agreed to by a majority of the managers for each house, and cannot be amended by either house. They must be approved by both houses. Elaborate rules govern the conduct of conferences.

CONGRESSIONAL RECORD — The daily, printed account of proceedings in both House and Senate chambers, with expressions during floor action reported verbatim. Committee activities are not covered, excepting their reports to the parent body. Highlights of legislative action are embodied in the Record, and Congressmen are entitled to have their extraneous remarks printed in its appendix. They may edit and revise remarks made on the floor, and frequently do, so that verbatim quotes reported in the press are not always found in the Record.

CORRECTING THE RECORD — Rules prohibit Members from changing their votes after the result has been announced. But frequently, hours, days, or months after a vote has been taken, a Member announces that he was "incorrectly recorded" and requests — and almost always gets — unanimous consent to have the vote corrected in the permanent edition of the Congressional Record. This occurs more frequently in the House than in the Senate. Errors in the text of the Record can be corrected in the same manner.

EXECUTIVE SESSION — Meeting of a Senate or House committee which only the group's members are privileged to attend. Frequently witnesses appear before committees meeting in executive session, and other Congressmen may be invited, but the public and press are not allowed.

EXPENDITURE — The actual expenditure of money as distinguished from the appropriation of it. Expenditures are made by the disbursing officers of the Administration; appropriations are made only by Congress. The two are rarely equal in any fiscal year; expenditures may represent money appropriated one, two or more years previously.

FILIBUSTER — An effort by a minority to prevent a vote on a bill which probably would pass if brought to a vote. Filibusters attempt to use time-consuming tactics. The most common method is to take advantage of the Senate's rule for unlimited debate, but other forms of parliamentary maneuvering may be used. The stricter rules in the House make filibusters more difficult, but they are attempted from time to time through devices such as repeated demands for quorum calls.

FISCAL YEAR — Financial operations of the government are carried out in a 12-month fiscal year, beginning on July 1 and ending on June 30. The fiscal year carries the date of the calendar year in which it ends.

FLOOR MANAGER — A Member, usually representing sponsors of a bill, who attempts to steer it through debate, revision, etc. to a final vote in the chamber. Floor managers are usually chairmen of the committees endorsing the bill and seeking its enactment, or ranking committeemen. Managers are responsible for apportioning the time granted supporters of the bill for debating it.

FRANK — A Congressman's facsimile signature on envelopes, used in lieu of stamps for his official, outgoing mail, thus postage-free.

GERMANE — Pertinence to the subject of a bill, of any amendments offered. All House amendments must be germane to the bill. The Senate requires germane amendments only to general appropriations bills, or those being considered under cloture.

HEARINGS — Most bills are not reported out of committee until interested persons are given a chance to be heard in support of, or opposition to, the legislation. The committee announces its hearings, from one day to many weeks in advance, and it may itself invite certain persons to testify. Persons who request time to testify may be turned down by the committee but most requests are honored.

HOPPER — Box on House Clerk's desk where bills are deposited on introduction.

HOUSE — The House of Representatives, as distinct from the Senate, although each body is a "house" of Congress.

IMMUNITY — Privilege of Congressmen to make verbal statements on the floor and in committee for which they cannot be sued or arrested for slander or libel. Also, freedom from arrest while traveling to or from sessions of Congress or on official business. Congressmen in this status may be arrested only for treason, felonies or a breach of the peace, as defined by Congressional manuals.

JOURNAL — The official record of the proceedings of the House and Senate. The Journal records the actions taken, but unlike the Congressional Record, it does not include the views expressed. Rules of both Houses provide for the Journal to be read and approved at the beginning of each legislative day. This is a matter of highest privilege and no other business can intervene except by unanimous consent, or, in the House, a successful motion to suspend the rules.

LAW — An Act which has been signed by the President, or passed over his veto by the Congress. Laws are listed by number; for example, the Housing Act of 1949 (S 1070) became Public Law No. 171.

LEGISLATIVE DAY — The "day" extending from the time either house meets after an adjournment until the time it next adjourns. Because the House normally adjourns from day to day, legislative days and calendar days usually coincide. But in the Senate, a legislative day may, and frequently does, extend over several calendar days.

LOBBY — Group seeking to influence the passage or defeat of legislation, usually for pay and on a full-time, organized basis. Elaborate definitions of what constitutes lobbying are set forth in the Legislative Reorganization Act of 1946.

MANUAL — The official handbook in each house prescribing its organization, procedures and operations in detail. The Senate Manual contains standing rules, orders, laws and resolutions affecting Senate business; the House Manual is the equivalent for the lower chamber. Both volumes contain previous codes under which Congress functioned and from which it continues to derive precedents. Committee powers are outlined. The rules set forth in the Manuals may be changed by elaborate chamber actions also specified by the Manuals.

MARKING UP A BILL — Going through a measure, usually in committee, taking it section by section, revising language, pencilling in new phrases, etc.

Writing a new bill: Recopying in final form for submittal a bill that has been heavily "marked up." Sometimes means abandoning a greatly revised bill and beginning anew.

MAJORITY LEADER — Officer of the nominally controlling party in either house who is virtually program director for that chamber, speaking for its majority.

MINORITY LEADER — Chief strategist and floor spokesman for the numerically inferior party in either house.

MOTION — Request by a Congressman for any one of a wide array of parliamentary actions. He "moves" for a certain procedure, or the consideration of a measure, or a vote, etc. Motions can only be made one at a time. The precedence of motions, and whether they are debatable, is set forth in the House and Senate Manuals. Motions most frequently resorted to in Congress include:

Recommit to Committee: A simple motion, made on the floor after deliberation on a bill, to return it to the committee which reported it. "Recommittal" is considered a death blow to the bill if approved. In the House a motion to recommit can be made only by a Member opposed to the bill, and in recognizing a Member to make the motion, the Speaker gives the minority party preference over the majority.

Recommit With Instructions: A motion to recommit may include instructions to the committee to report the bill again with specific amendments or by a certain date. Or the instructions may be to make a particular study with no definite deadline for final action.

Reconsider A Vote: A motion to reconsider the vote by which an action was taken has the effect, until it is disposed of, of suspending the action. In the Senate the motion can be made only by a member who voted on the prevailing side of the original question, or by a member who did not vote at all. In the House it can be made only by a member on the prevailing side. A common practice after close votes in the Senate is a motion to reconsider followed by a precedence-taking motion to table the motion to reconsider. On this motion to table, Senators vote as they voted on the original question to enable the motion to table to prevail. The matter is then finally closed and further motions to reconsider are not entertained. As a routine precaution in the House, the Speaker announces after every vote that "without objection, a motion to reconsider is laid on the table." Motions to reconsider must be entered in the Senate within the next two days of actual session after the original vote has been taken. In the House they must be entered either on the same day or on the next succeeding day the House is in session.

Table A Bill: The motion to "lay on the table" is not debatable in either house, and is usually a method of making a final, adverse disposition of a matter. In the Senate, however, different language is sometimes used. The motion is worded to let a bill "lie on the table", perhaps for subsequent "picking up." This motion is more flexible, merely keeping the bill pending for later action if desired.

Previous Question: In this sense, a "question" is an "issue" before the House for a vote and the issue is "previous" when some other topic has superseded it in the attention of the chamber. A motion for the previous question, when carried, has the effect of cutting off all extraneous debate and forcing a vote on the subject originally at hand. If, however, the previous question is moved and carried before there has been any debate on the subject at hand and the subject is debatable, then 40 minutes of debate is allowed before the vote. The previous question is sometimes moved on a non-debatable question in order to prevent amendments. The motion for the previous question is a debate-limiting device and is not in order in the Senate.

Dilatory Motion: A motion, usually made upon a technical point, for the purpose of killing time and preventing action on a bill. The rules outlaw dilatory motions, but enforcement is largely within the discretion of the presiding officer.

MORNING HOUR — The time set aside at the beginning of each legislative day for the consideration of regular routine business. The "hour" is of indefinite duration in the House, where it is rarely used. It lasts two hours in the Senate where it is used more frequently. The morning hour can be terminated earlier if the morning business has been completed. This business includes such matters as messages from the President, communications from the heads of departments, messages from the House, the presentation of petitions and memorials, reports of standing and select committees and the introduction of bills and resolutions. During the first hour of the morning hour in the Senate, no motion to proceed to the consideration of any bill on the calendar is in order except by unanimous consent. During the second hour, motions can be made but must be decided without debate.

NOMINATIONS — Names of persons appointed by the executive branch of the government to hold office. The Senate is required by the Constitution to confirm, or withhold confirmation from, these persons. Sometimes Senators object to appointees as being "personally obnoxious" to them, with other Senators blocking the appointment out of courtesy to colleagues.

ONE MINUTE SPEECHES — Addresses by House members at the beginning of a legislative day. The speeches may cover any subject, but are strictly limited to one minute's duration.

POINT OF ORDER — An objection raised by a Congressman that the chamber is departing from rules governing its conduct of business. The objector cites the rule violated, the chair sustaining his objection if correctly made. Order is restored by the chair suspending proceedings of the chamber until it conforms to the prescribed "order of business". Often a point of no order — noise and disorderly conduct in the chamber — is similarly made and treated.

PRIVILEGE — Privilege relates to the rights of Congressmen, and to the relative priority of the motions and actions they may make in their respective chambers. The two are distinct. "Privileged questions" concern legislative business. "Questions of privilege" concern legislators themselves.

Privileged Questions: The order in which legislative measures may be considered by Congress is governed by strict priorities. Other things being equal between two bills, for example, the one with the higher precedence according to chamber rules is considered first. It is considered more "privileged" than the other, perhaps because of its nature. Motions are similarly ranked. A motion to table is more privileged than a motion to recommit. Thus a motion to recommit can be superseded by a motion to table. Even if the recommital-move were before the chamber for action at the time, it would be eclipsed by the more privileged tabling-move, and a vote would be forced on the latter motion only. A motion to adjourn, however, would take precedence over this one, and is thus considered of the "highest privilege."

Questions of Privilege: These are matters affecting members of Congress individually or collectively. Congressmen singly involve questions of "personal privilege." A member rising to a question of personal privilege is given precedence over almost all other proceedings. An annotation in the House Rules points out that the privilege of the Member rests primarily on the Constitution, which gives him a conditional immunity from arrest; and an unconditional freedom of debate in the House.

Questions affecting the rights, safety, dignity and integrity of proceedings of the House or Senate as a whole are questions of privilege of the House or Senate, as the case may be.

QUORUM — The number of Members whose presence is necessary for the transaction of business. In the Senate and House it is a majority of the membership (when there are no vacancies, this is 49 in the Senate and 218 in the House). A quorum is 100 in the Committee of the Whole. If a point of order is made that a quorum is not present, the only business in order is either a motion to adjourn or a motion to direct the Sergeant-at-Arms to request the attendance of absentees.

RECESS — Distinguished from adjournment in that a recess does not end a legislative day and therefore does not interfere with unfinished business. The rules in each house set forth certain matters to be taken up and disposed of at the beginning of each legislative day. The House, which operates under much stricter rules than the Senate, usually adjourns from day to day. The Senate often recesses.

REPORT — Both a verb and a noun. A committee which has been examining a bill referred to it by the parent chamber "reports" its findings and recommendations to the chamber when the committee returns the measure. The process is called "reporting" a bill. A "report" is the document setting forth the committee's explanations of its action. Most reports favor a bill's passage. Adverse reports are occasionally submitted, but more often, when a committee disapproves a bill, it simply fails to report it at all. When a committee report is not unanimous, the dissenting committeemen may file a statement of their views, called Minority Views and referred to as a Minority Report.

RULE — A rule may be either a standing order governing the conduct of House or Senate business and listed in each chamber's Manual, or a decision made by the House Rules Committee as to how a specific measure shall be considered on the floor. The House group may determine under which rule in the House Manual a bill shall be considered, or it may provide a "special rule." In its most common usage, such a rule is in the form of a Resolution introduced by the Rules Committee. If adopted by the House, the resolution becomes a temporary rule as valid as any standing rule. The special rule lapses only after action has been completed on the measure to which it pertains to.

A special rule provides the maximum time for general debate. It may also waive points of order against provisions of the bill in question or against specified amendments intended to be proposed to the bill. It may even forbid all amendments or all amendments except those proposed by the legislative committee which handled the bill. In this case it is known as a "closed" or "gag" rule, as opposed to an "open" rule which puts no limitation on floor action, thus leaving the bill open to alteration.

In the absence of any special rule to facilitate consideration of business, a standing rule may be suspended. Suspension requires approval of a motion to that effect which can be made in the House only on the first and third Mondays of each month, and during the last six days of a session. On such motions, 40 minutes debate is allowed and a two-thirds vote necessary. The usual form of the motion is to suspend the rules and pass a given bill. The question of suspending the rules and passing the bill is voted on as a whole and is not divisible. No amendments are allowed. Failure of the motion, however, does not kill the bill.

SENATE PRESIDENT — Presiding officer of the upper chamber, normally the Vice President of the U. S. In his absence, a President Pro Tempore (President for the time being) presides.

SPEAKER — The presiding officer of the House of Representatives, elected by its members.

SPECIAL SESSION — A session of Congress after it had adjourned sine die, completing its regular session. Special sessions are convened by the President of the U. S. under his Constitutional powers.

STRIKE OUT THE LAST WORD — A move whereby House members are entitled to speak for a fixed time on a measure then being debated by the chamber. A Member gains recognition from the chair by moving to strike out the last word of the amendment or section of the bill then under consideration. The motion is perfunctory, and customarily requires no vote.

STRIKE FROM THE RECORD — Remarks made on the House floor may offend some Member, who moves that the offending words be "taken down" for the Speaker's cognizance, and then expunged from the verbatim report to be carried in the Congressional Record.

SUBSTITUTE — A motion, an amendment, or an entire bill introduced in place of pending business. Passage of a substitute measure kills the original measure by supplanting it. Substitutes may be amended.

TREATIES — Executive proposals which must be submitted to the Senate for approval of 2/3 of the Senators present. Before they act on such foreign policy matters, Senators may refer them to committee for scrutiny. Treaties are read three times and debated in the chamber much as legislative proposals.

VETO — Disapproval by the President of a bill or joint resolution, other than one proposing an amendment to the Constitution. When Congress is in session, the President must veto a bill within 10 days, excluding Sundays, after he has received it; otherwise it becomes law with or without his signature. When the President vetoes a bill, he returns it to the House of its origin with a message stating his objections. The veto then becomes a question of high privilege.

Override a veto: A two-thirds vote is required to override and the yeas-and-nays are required by the Constitution. The form of the question is, "Shall the bill pass, the objections of the President to the contrary notwithstanding?"

Pocket Veto: The act of the President withholding his approval of a bill after Congress has adjourned. When Congress is in session, a bill becomes law without the President's signature if he does not act upon it within 10 days, excluding Sundays, from the time he gets it. But if Congress adjourns within that 10-day period, the bill is killed without the President's signature.

VOTES — There are several methods by which Congressmen may register approval or disapproval of matters before them in committee or in their respective chambers. These include:

Voice Vote: In either House or Senate, Members answer aye or no in chorus and the presiding officer decides the result.

Division Vote: In either House or Senate, Members in favor stand and are counted by the presiding officer. Then members opposed stand and are counted. Members are not recorded individually. In the House, the presiding officer announces the numbers for and against. In the Senate, only the result is announced.

Teller Vote: In the House, Members file past tellers and are counted as "yea" or "nay" but not recorded individually. The teller vote is not used in the Senate. In the House, tellers are ordered upon demand of one fifth of a quorum. This is 44 in the House, 20 in Committee of the Whole.

Record Vote: This is a roll call of the entire chamber membership, to which each Member must answer Yea or Nay. The Constitution requires yea-and-nay votes on the question of overriding a veto. In other cases, they can be obtained by the demand of one-fifth of the Members present. In the House, the yeas-and-nays are required automatically whenever a Member objects to a non-record vote when a quorum is not present if the question is one which requires a quorum. The yeas-and-nays are not taken in the Committee of the Whole.

"Without Objection": Used in lieu of a vote on non-controversial motions, amendments, or bills, which may be passed in either the House or the Senate if no Member voices an objection.

"Unanimous Consent": Synonymous with "Without Objection".

Pairs: Frequently Congressmen are either unable to attend a roll call vote, or do not wish to be recorded officially in its final tally. They resort to the device of pairing, an opponent of the measure coupling with a proponent. Pairs do not affect the announced totals of roll call votes. "General" pairs between two Members are in effect until mutually suspended. Other pairs apply to specific votes only, and reveal the position of each person pairing.

Another device for registering opinion on a bill without recording a vote is for a member to "announce" or "declare" — after the roll has been called — what his vote would have been.

Senators serve for six years. The governor of a state may appoint a Senator to fill a vacancy until the next election. A Senator appointed or elected to fill a vacancy serves for the remainder of his predecessor's term.

HOW CHANGES CAME ABOUT

Alben W. Barkley (D Ky.) resigned Jan. 19, 1949, to become vice president of the United States and president of the Senate. Garrett L. Withers (D) was appointed to fill the vacancy until the 1950 elections. The governor who appointed him, Earle C. Clements, was elected at that time for the term expiring in 1951 and for the following 6-year term, and took his seat Nov. 27, 1950.

J. Melville Broughton (D N.C.) died March 6, 1949. Frank P. Graham (D) was appointed March 29 to serve until the 1950 elections. Graham won the first North Carolina Democratic primary May 27, 1950, but lost in the runoff primary June 24 to Willis Smith who was automatically elected Nov. 7 and took his seat Nov. 27, 1950 for the term expiring in 1955.

Robert F. Wagner (D N.Y.) resigned because of ill health June 28, 1949. John Foster Dulles (R) was appointed July 8 to serve until the by-election. He was defeated Nov. 8, 1949 by Herbert H. Lehman (D Lib.), who took his seat effective that date for the term expiring in 1951. Lehman was re-elected in 1950 for the following 6-year term.

J. Howard McGrath (D R.I.) resigned Aug. 23, 1949 to become Attorney General. Edward L. Leahy (D) was appointed Aug. 24 to serve until the 1950 elections. John O. Pastore (D) was elected in November for the term expiring in 1953, and took his seat Dec. 19, 1950.

Bert H. Miller (D Idaho) died Oct. 8, 1949. Henry C. Dworshak (R) was appointed Oct. 15 to fill the vacancy, and was elected Nov. 7, 1950 to complete the term expiring in 1955.

Clyde M. Reed (R Kan.) died Nov. 8, 1949. Harry M. Darby (R) was appointed by Gov. Frank Carlson to serve until the 1950 elections. Carlson (R) was elected in November to complete the term expiring in 1951 and for the following 6-year term. He took his seat Nov. 29, 1950.

Raymond E. Baldwin (R Conn.) resigned Dec. 17, 1949 to take a seat on the Connecticut supreme court. Gov. Chester Bowles (D) Dec. 5 appointed William Benton, a political independent, to serve until the 1950 elections. Benton was the Democratic candidate in November, 1950, for the term expiring in 1953, and won after a touch-and-go race against Prescott S. Bush, the Republican candidate.

Sheridan Downey (D Calif.), whose term expired in 1951, resigned because of ill health Nov. 30, 1950. Richard M. Nixon (R) who had won the election for the term expiring in 1957, was appointed to fill the vacancy and took his seat Dec. 4, 1950. Downey was not a candidate for re-election, and the 1950 contest was between Nixon and Helen Gahagan Douglas (D), both serving as Representatives from California.

Representatives serve for two years. Vacancies may be filled by election only. Scheduling a special election may require several months, and depends upon state laws. The longest vacancy in the 81st Congress occurred when the Fifth District of Illinois was unrepresented during the entire second session because of the death, late in 1949, of Rep. Martin Gorski.

HOW CHANGES CAME ABOUT

John J. Delaney (D N. Y.) died Nov. 18, 1948, leaving one vacancy in the House when it convened. Louis B. Heller (D) was elected in Brooklyn Feb. 15, 1949, and was sworn in Feb. 28, 1949.

Sol Bloom (D N. Y.) died March 7, 1949. He was replaced by Franklin

D. Roosevelt, Jr., who was elected in Manhattan May 17, 1949. Roosevelt ran on the ticket of the Liberal and Four Freedoms Parties, opposing the Tammany - backed Democrat, and Republican and ALP candidates. He took his seat June 14, 1949 as a Democrat - Liberal.

Andrew L. Somers (D N. Y.) died April 6, 1949. The seat remained unfilled during the first session. Mrs. Edna Kelly (D) won in the New York election Nov. 8, 1949, in Brooklyn, and filled the vacancy effective that date.

Robert L. Coffey, Jr. (D Pa.) was killed April 20, 1949 when the plane he was piloting crashed. His mother, Mrs. Robert L. Coffey (D) lost to John P. Saylor (R) in a special election Sept. 13, 1949. Saylor took his seat Sept. 28, 1949.

Richard J. Welch (R Calif.) died Sept. 10, 1949. John F. Shelley, Democrat and president of the California Federation of Labor, was elected to the vacancy Nov. 8, 1949, and took his seat effective that date.

George J. Bates (R Mass.) was killed Nov. 1, 1949, in a commercial plane crash that took 50 lives. He was succeeded by his son, Lt. Comdr. William H. Bates, who won a special election Feb. 14, 1950, and was sworn in March 1, 1950.

Martin Gorski (D Ill.) died Dec. 4, 1949. His seat remained unfilled during the 81st Congress, as the Democratic candidate who won the seat for the 82nd Congress did not file for the 81st Congress vacancy.

J. Parnell Thomas (R N. J.) resigned Jan. 2, 1950 to serve a prison sentence for fraud. William B. Widnall (R) was sworn in Feb. 14, 1950 to fill the vacancy after winning a special election Feb. 6.

Schuyler Otis Bland (D Va.), Chairman of the House Merchant Marine and Fisheries Committee, died Feb. 16, 1950. He was succeeded by Edward J. Robeson, Jr. (D) who won a special election May 2, 1950 and was sworn in May 11, 1950.

Eugene Worley (D Tex.) resigned April 3, 1950, after he had been nominated by the President and confirmed by the Senate as associate judge of the U. S. Court of Customs and Patent Appeals. Ben H. Guill, the lone Republican candidate won out over 10 Democratic opponents in the May 6 election, and Texas had a Republican in Congress for the first time in 24 years.

John Lesinski (D Mich.), Chairman of the House Education and Labor Committee, died May 27, 1950. His son, John Lesinski Jr. (D) won the contest for the 82nd Congress, but did not file for the existing vacancy, and the seat remained unfilled during the 81st Congress.

William Lemke (R N. D.) died May 30, 1950. His seat remained unfilled during the 81st Congress, as 82nd Congress candidates did not file for the 81st Congress vacancy.

Ralph E. Church (R Ill.) died March 21, 1950, shortly after suffering a heart attack while testifying before the House Expenditures Committee against the President's plan to reorganize the National Labor Relations Board. His wife, Marguerite S. Church (R) won the election for the 82nd Congress, but did not file for the short term, so the seat remained unfilled for the remainder of the 81st Congress.

Alfred L. Bulwinkle (D N. C.) died Aug. 31, 1950. Woodrow W. Jones (D), successful candidate for the 82nd Congress and for the 81st Congress vacancy, took his seat Nov. 30, 1950.

Herbert A. Myer (R Kan.) died Oct. 2, 1950. He was replaced Nov. 27 by Myron V. George (R) who won the seat both for the 81st Congress and for the 82nd Congress.

Richard M. Nixon (R Calif.) resigned Nov. 30 in order to accept appointment to fill the Senate vacancy caused by the resignation of Sheridan Downey.

Frank A. Barrett (R Wyo.) resigned December 15 to become governor of Wyoming.

Committees of the 81st Congress

Senate

To prepare bills for consideration by the upper chamber, the Senate has 15 standing committees. The largest of these is the 21-member Appropriations Committee. Most groups have 13 members.

Under the Legislative Reoganization Act of 1946, majority Senators are entitled to serve on two committees, plus either the Expenditures in the Executive Departments Committee or the District of Columbia Committee. Minority senators are entitled to serve on any two committees. In the second session of the 81st Congress, Democrats without full committee assignments were: James O. Eastland, Miss. (Expenditures and Judiciary Committees); and William Benton, Conn. (Rules and Administration, and Expenditures Committees). Republicans without full assignments were: Frank Carlson, Kan. (Post Office and Civil Service Committee); and Richard M. Nixon, Calif. (District of Columbia Committee).

As in the House, committee chairmanships go to Senators with seniority in point of view of their committee service. Committee assignments are made by the Democratic Steering Committee and the Republican Committee on Committees. The selections are submitted to the respective party conferences for approval, after which the Majority and Minority leaders present their resolutions to the Senate, naming the members and designating the chairmen of the committees. Senate floor action is taken by simple majority vote.

Each party has a policy committee, called a "conference". All Democratic Senators automatically belong to the Democratic Conference, and all Republicans belong to the Republican Conference.

House

The House has 19 standing committees, ranging in size from the nine-member Un-American Activities Group to the 45-member Appropriations Committee. The average group numbers 25 or 27. The majority party's members always outnumber the minority members. The ratio established between them frequently changes from Congress to Congress.

Under the Legislative Reorganization Act of 1946, members of the majority party are entitled to one committee post, or two, if one is the District of Columbia, Expenditures, House Administration or Un-American Activities Committee. Members of the minority party are entitled to serve on one committee, or two, if one is the District of Columbia unit or Un-American Activities group.

Each party's Committee on Committees submits resolutions of appointments for each standing committee. The resolutions ordinarily pass the House by unanimous consent.

The majority member with greatest seniority on the committee automatically becomes chairman.

Subcommittees are formed from the total committee memberships, have their own chairmen, and are usually autonomous while executing their functions. However, their reports and findings must be acted upon by the full parent committee before submission to the House.

In addition to standing committees, the House has Select and Special committees, set up by special resolution for a definite, and renewable, duration. They are usually investigative in nature. They deal with specific questions. Chairmanships usually go to members best acquainted with the field in which the group will function.

Besides the foregoing categories of committees, each party has its political committees. These include the groups on policy, the direction of legislation through the House, and campaign matters, as well as the committees on committees and caucus groups. Each party's caucus group includes all members of that party in the House.

Joint Committees

Joint committees draw upon both parties and both houses of Congress for their members. Members are assigned in the same fashion as they are to standing committees. Most joint committees or commissions are set up to examine special and specific questions. Their studies may be continuing, with the committees' existence being periodically renewed.

Joint committees deal with legislative matters primarily. Commissions relate to more general matters, and usually include members of the Executive or Judiciary branches of the government, as well as figures prominent in public life.

Following is a list of Congressional committees, with a brief outline of the function of each. Also shown are the names of the chairman and the ranking Republican member, as of Dec. 30, 1950.

81st CONGRESS--

WHAT IT DID

Second Session Highlights

At its marathon second session which sat until a few hours before its successor took over, the 81st Congress broke its own mark for spending.

The first session of the 81st Congress had appropriated the greatest total of public funds of any peacetime Congress. Yet the second session, though interrupted by a 65-day recess for the mid-term elections, outspent even the first, thus establishing the two-year tenure of the 81st Congress as the most expensive peacetime period in history.

Highlights of the second session (for first session resume see CQ Almanac, 1949, pages 40-44) in the various fields:

Agriculture

Oleomargarine — Federal taxes on the manufacture and sale of oleomargarine were repealed at the second session of the 81st Congress. Removed July 1, 1950, were the following taxes: One-fourth cent a pound on uncolored margarine and 10 cents a pound on colored margarine; $600 a year on manufacturers of oleo; $480 a year on wholesalers of colored oleo; $200 a year on wholesalers of uncolored margarine; $48 a year on retailers of colored, and $6 a year on retailers of uncolored margarine.

Price Supports — Congress increased by $2 billion the money the Commodity Credit Corporation may borrow from the Treasury to support farm commodity prices, but a vote by the Vice President to break a 35-35 Senate tie was necessary to prevent defeat of the bill.

Acreage Allotments — Cotton, peanut and potato acreage limitations for 1950 were eased under an amendment to the Agricultural Adjustment Act of 1938. The resolution provided that the 1951 potato crop not be supported unless strict marketing quotas are in effect. An attempt to ease restrictions on wheat was not included in the compromise version finally enacted.

Brannan Plan — At the close of the session, the Brannan Plan for maintaining crop prices while reducing cost of farm products to consumers had made no progress towards enactment.

Food Prices — A Senate Agriculture Subcommittee on utilization of farm crops and price spreads headed by Guy M. Gillette (D Iowa) studied prices of milk, bread and other products but centered its efforts on coffee. Gillette introduced a bill to extend Commodity Exchange Authority over coffee speculation and futures trading, and the Subcommittee issued June 9 a report demanding curbs and blaming speculation, rather than a shortage, for rising coffee prices. The State Department joined Latin American nations in a protest against the report.

Appropriations

Totals — Congress shelled out a record - breaking total for peacetime of $83,676,057,370 during its protracted second session. Some $20 billion in new cash and contract authority was provided in the brief "lame duck" session alone. Out of the staggering total of funds appropriated, nearly three out of every four dollars went for military purposes. Almost $9 billion of the remainder went for permanent, fixed expenses of the government, such as interest on the public debt.

There were five funds bills. Two were needed for unforeseen (deficiency) costs of the fiscal year which ended June 30, 1950. The first of these was the $837,614,600 Urgent Deficiency Act carrying funds primarily for the Veterans Administration and the Atomic Energy Commission. It became law March 27. The second was the Deficiency Bill, carrying $653,761,608 in cash and $35 million in contract authority. The measure, mainly for defraying salaries and other legal obligations of the government, became law June 29.

Omnibus Bill — The third funds bill was the largest of them all. It was the so-called "omnibus" measure providing $36,153,600,425 for all general governmental expenses for the new fiscal year — ending June 30, 1951. The multi-chaptered General Appropriations Act took the place of the dozen single - shot bills Congress had previously used to grant funds to federal agencies one at a time. Members of the House and Senate Appropriations Committees expressed themselves two to one in favor of the omnibus approach. The measure became law Sept. 6.

After the outbreak of warfare in Korea, the President laid two additional bills before Congress — both asking for supplemental appropriations. The first was the Supplemental Appropriations Bill, carrying $17,157,402,285 for emergency war and defense needs, and $18 million in borrowing authority for the Farmers Home Administration. The measure became law Sept. 27. The second bill — the fifth and final one enacted by the 81st Congress' second session — was the Second Supplemental Appropriations Bill. Sent to the White House the final day of the expiring Congress, it granted $20,065,412,938 for further rearmament and defense costs. It became law Jan. 6, 1951.

Education And Welfare

Social Security — In one of its major accomplishments, the 81st Congress at its second session completed enactment of a sweeping law expanding the national social security program. An estimated 10,000,000 persons not previously covered by social security were brought within its scope. Existing benefits to covered persons were boosted by as much as 70 to 100 per cent. Machinery for handling the program and deducting from wages of the persons affected was revised. As put on the law books, the previous maximum of $45 monthly benefit for a single worker was raised to $68.50, for one example. The maximum family benefit was set at $150, for another. Payroll deductions to pay for the expanded program were to rise from the previous 1 1/2 per cent to 3 1/4 per cent over the next 20 years. Much of the new law provided for grants to states for public assistance programs.

Housing — Another major action made federal aid available for the construction of housing for middle-income families. Congress authorized $3 billion worth of mortgage insurance to be issued by the Federal Housing Administration for housing projects; a quarter of a billion dollars worth of additional mortgage purchasing power was given the Federal National Mortgage Association; and $450 million was authorized for direct loans to veterans and colleges for housing. But Congress knocked out a feature which would have authorized a $2 billion loan for cooperative housing projects.

Science — After several years of discussion, a National Science Foundation was actually set up by lawmakers. The Foundation was enabled to make grants and loans for "pure" and applied research, to perform research for defense, to give scholarships and fellowships, and to coordinate the Foundations' program with other private and public research.

Schools — Several school construction bills were enacted into law. One major measure authorized the construction of new schools in so-called "defense areas" over-crowded by military facilities located nearby. A second measure authorized federal aid for the maintenance and expansion of schools already existing in those areas.

Education & Health—Obvious because of its failure to become law in 1950 was Administration - backed legislation to grant federal aid to the states for their general education programs. Although passed by the Senate in 1949, the aid-to-education measure bogged down in the House Education Committee. Congressmen could not reach agreement on a controversial provision in it that made private and parochial schools eligible for federal financial aid in states which would permit it.

Another measure notable because it received no final action was the Administration's compulsory health insurance plan. It was pigeonholed fairly early in the second session in the House Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee.

Foreign Policy

Economic Aid—For the third consecutive year, Congress extended the Marshall Plan and authorized a total of $2,850 million to finance Economic Cooperation Administration operations during fiscal 1951. This sum was for economic aid to Western European nations. In addition, the Marshall aid extension law authorized the use of $100 million in previously appropriated money for China area assistance and $15 million for the International Children's Emergency Fund. Some $27 million was approved for the relief of Arab refugees.

The economic aid bill carried two new authorizations. One granted $100 million for Korea in the form of a "Little ECA" for that country which had not yet been invaded when the bill was passed in May. The second was a $35 million authorization for the so-called "Point Four" program designed to aid underdeveloped areas of the world.

Spain — Although the bill authorizing the extension of the European Recovery Program carried no section dealing with Spain, the subsequent money measure providing funds for the program earmarked $65 million for that country.

Korea — Long before open fighting flared in Korea, the American-backed Republic figured prominently in foreign aid actions in Congress. Shortly after the House reconvened in January, 1950, it turned an aid-to-Korea measure down by a 191-192 vote. But two weeks later the House reversed itself, and passed a $60 million compromise measure with an aid-to-Formosa feature. The island—headquarters for the Chinese Nationalist Government—was made eligible for $103 million previously appropriated for China itself, before that country was conquered entirely by the Communists. The Korean-Formosan measure became law.

Yugoslavia — At its "lame duck" session, the 81st Congress took a $38 million step in the foreign policy field by authorizing the ECA to make that sum available to Yugoslavia, beset by drought and near-famine conditions. The Yugoslav aid bill went through Congress with comfortable voting majorities, but drew widespread discussion of the communist character of the Yugoslav regime.

Arms Aid — Some three weeks after the start of the Korean war, Congress sent the President a law authorizing a $1,222,500,000 military assistance program for nations resisting communism. One billion of the total was for North Atlantic Pact countries and involved the extension for a second year of the Mutual Defense Assistance program launched in 1949. In addition to the billion for the Pact nations, Congress authorized the appropriation of $131.5 million for Greece, Turkey and Iran, $75 million for the general area of China, and $16 million in direct military aid to Korea and the Philippines.

DPs, Aliens — Congress liberalized the law — previously described by President Truman as discriminatory against Jews and Catholics — permitting displaced persons to enter the U. S. The original 1948 DP law authorized the admission of 205,000 aliens. The 1950 liberalization raised this figure to 341,000, plus 5,000 adopted children, 54,744 persons of German ethnic origin, and 15,000 persons already in this country on temporary visas. Quotas established for different groups of DPs by the 1948 law were softened or removed. Also eased were the original law's "cut-off" dates used to determine when a person actually assumed DP status.

Nominations, Policy — A notable nomination was that of William O'Dwyer, mayor of New York City, to be Ambassador to Mexico. After many Congressmen called the appointment a purely political one, Senate hearings were held on O'Dwyer. He was confirmed later by a 42-22 party-line ballot. All Democrats voting favored the nomination. Only four of the 26 Republicans voting on the nomination supported it.

The outbreak of war in Korea poured fuel on the flames of Congressional agitation over foreign policy. Bipartisanship was severely tested, and Congressmen in both parties were not backward in asserting that it had ceased to exist as a climate for the formulation of U. S. policy. The Republican caucuses drafted resolutions demanding the resignation of Secretary of State Dean Acheson. But the Democrats in the Senate beat back an attempt spearheaded by James Kem (R Mo.) to hail Acheson before Congress for a hat-in-hand account of talks between President Truman and British Prime Minister Clement Attlee over the world crisis. Defeat of the Kem resolution was interpreted as a blow against persons seeking the ouster of Acheson.

Labor

Repeal of the Labor-Management Relations Act of 1947 — the Taft-Hartley law — was virtually a dead issue in the second session of the 81st Congress. While the law figured in some debates before the outbreak of the Korean war, it was seldom mentioned after fighting began. No action of any kind was taken on repeal legislation.

Strike Bills — But the 1950 coal and threatened railroad strikes irked the Congress. The coal strike in February brought a Presidential request early in March for authorization to seize the struck mines. A number of bills were promptly drawn, but the seizure measures were scrapped when the coal dispute was settled before action on them could be completed.

The threat of a nation-wide railroad strike in August led to a Presidential seizure of the roads a few hours before the walkout was scheduled to begin. Although the seizure caused cancellation of the strike, it prompted Sen. Forrest C. Donnell (R Mo.) to introduce a bill banning rail strikes. Opposition expressed to the measure at a series of Senate hearings produced an unfavorable report on the bill by the Senate Labor Committee. The bill received much more debate, but no action.

However, Congress did enact a new law amending the Railway Labor Act to allow union shops in the rail industry and to permit union members to use the check-off system of paying dues.

Maritime Hiring — A long-pending bill to legalize the union hiring hall method of obtaining crews in the maritime industry failed to get completed action in the second session. If the measure had been passed, it would have waived the Taft-Hartley law's ban on the closed shop with respect to waterfront hiring halls. The bill, sponsored by Sen. Warren G. Magnuson (D Wash.), had been the target of widely differing testimony from scores of witnesses at extended hearings.

Labor Relations — A special subcommittee of the Senate Labor and Public Welfare Committee made a number of investigations into labor-management relations. Headed by Sen. James E. Murray (D Mont.), the unit concentrated on problems in the textile, telephone and oil tanker fields. It made on-the-spot inquiries into violence-ridden disputes in Southern textile areas, and continued prolonged hearings in Washington on the situations. It looked into charges of alleged union-busting in the oil tanker industry, and examined collective bargaining arrangements in the telephone industry. Reports of all its studies were submitted to Congress.

Military And Veterans

Problems of manpower preoccupied the Congress in its deliberations to build military strength. The lawmakers removed the ceilings on personnel strength of the armed services, although they stipulated that the ceilings should be suspended for only four years. The authorized strength had been 2,005,000 men and officers, though the actual strength then was well below that.

Draft — Two days after Korea was invaded, Congress extended the peacetime draft for a year and provided for the conscription of doctors, dentists, and related specialists.

Family Benefits — Lawmakers voted new family benefits for servicemen. In the lower grades, enlisted men were allowed $45 monthly for one dependent, $67.50 for two dependents, and $83 for three. In addition, the serviceman would contribute $40 of his pay. Higher ranking enlisted men received a similar allowance scale.

Universal military training was the subject of numerous speeches and some hearings, but failed to get legislative action. Although the Korean war brought a renewal of the Administration's request for passage of UMT, the President later asked postponement of the legislation until leaders had time to start such a long range program.

Code, Construction — Congress at its second session also established a uniform military justice code and closed loopholes in veterans' education programs. It authorized a $596 million military construction program, plus $250 million worth of construction of new armories over the nation. The military public works legislation provided for general construction on military bases, research and development, housing outside the United States, and "special weapons" projects. Proposals for military housing in the U. S. were not included in the final enactment.

Personalities — Congress also gave its attention to individuals holding key posts in the military program. Allegations that Anna M. Rosenberg — named to be assistant Secretary of Defense — once sympathized with communism were investigated by Senators and pronounced to be without foundation. Her appointment was confirmed by the Senate.

The upheaval in the top defense command over Navy policy, which had resulted in the ouster of Adm. Louis E. Denfeld as Chief of Naval Operations, simmered down after the Senate confirmation of his successor, Adm. Forrest P. Sherman.

Home Front — On the home front, Congress provided for such things as abaca production and tighter port security. It set up the War Preparedness Committee which blasted several government agencies for lackadaisical mobilization effort. The unit — similar to the so-called Truman War Committee which performed a related function during World War II — was headed by Sen. Lyndon Johnson (D Tex.)

Miscellaneous And Administrative

Security Laws — Internal security preoccupied the Congress. Scant hours before it adjourned for the November elections, Congress overrode a Presidential veto to put the sweeping "Internal Security Act of 1950" on the nation's law books. This measure called for the registration of individuals and organizations deemed Communist or Communist-front by the Attorney General. Stiff penalties for failure to register were prescribed, but elaborate administrative methods and opportunities for judicial review were spelled out. A Subversives Activities Board to help administer the Act was created but President Truman's appointees to the Board failed to get formal action from the Senate.

The Act also provided for the detention of persons considered to be menaces to the nation in time of an internal security emergency. This so-called "concentration camp" section could not be put into effect without a proclamation of such an emergency, a declaration or war, or invasion of the U. S.

Congress also passed laws permitting the heads of certain "sensitive" federal agencies summarily to fire persons considered to be bad security risks, and extending the statute of limitations where espionage cases were involved.

Aliens received detailed attention. The Internal Security law wrapped up earlier attempts to require registration of all aliens, to deport certain ones, to detain others, and to tighten drastically immigration.

McCarthy Charges — Charges that Communists and sympathizers infested the Department of State touched off the most controversial single investigation the 81st Congress undertook. The charges originated in a speech Sen. Joseph McCarthy (R Wis.) made on Lincoln's birthday.

After two days of acrid debate and maneuvering on the Senate floor, Senators set up a special subcommittee to investigate McCarthy's charges. Sen. Millard Tydings (D Md.) headed the group, which took testimony from most of the individuals McCarthy had named. Among them were Owen Lattimore, a Johns Hopkins professor and authority on the Far East, John W. Service, a Foreign Service officer flown back from India to appear at the hearings, Ambassador at Large Philip C. Jessup, and other officials.

The hearings continued for months. McCarthy asserted that the loyalty files on the individuals named had been "raped" before submission to the Tydings group. The latter group's majority denied this over the protests of its Republican members. The dispute over the files themselves — whether they should be made available to the Senators — involved the President. He ultimately laid them open for scrutiny by the investigators.

When the investigative Subcommittee issued its final report in July, it called McCarthy's charges "false" and a "fraud" and it cleared individuals he had named. The group's majority report expressed its belief the "Amerasia" case had been settled properly.

But the Republican minority report, written by Sen. Henry Cabot Lodge (R Mass.), sharply criticized the Tydings group's majority as "superficial and inconclusive" in their investigation and said that the context of the hearings "often lacked impartiality." McCarthy himself called the majority report "a green light to the Red fifth column in the United States."

Contempt Citations — An unprecedented number of 63 individuals were formally cited by the House or the Senate for being contemptuous of Congress in refusing to answer certain questions put to them by Congressional committees. The Un-American Activities unit produced 56 citations, the Tydings Subcommittee three, the House Committee on Lobbying Activities three and the Senate Crime Investigating Committee one.

Lobby Probe — A House Select Committee to Investigage Lobbying Activities, headed by Rep. Frank Buchanan (D Pa.) held hearings through most of the second session. Sharp clashes flared between Democrats and Republicans over the group's methods in conducting the inquiry. Buchanan several times denied his survey was intended to "get" big corporations. But Republicans disputed the claim that the group was studying "both sides of the (lobbying) street." The Committee issued a spate of reports during the session. Its conclusions — supported by the majority but differently presented by the minority — asserted that $32 million was spent annually in corporate lobbying. The group said lobbying was not of itself harmful to the legislative process, but that it should be conducted "in a gold fish bowl." The Committee suggested changes in the 1946 law regulating lobbying activities.

Crime Study — A Senate Committee to Investigate Interstate Crime, headed by Sen. Estes Kefauver (D Tenn.) made numerous trips to all parts of the country to hold on-the-spot hearings. It concentrated on determining whether interstate crime syndicates did in fact exist, and on gamblers and other underworld characters, and if they had political connections. Although the group's final report was deferred to 1951 after additional hearings could be held, it issued an interim report avowing that crime flourished best in a bipartisan atmosphere.

Although not expressly handled by the Crime Investigating Committee, one anti-gambling law was put on the books. Congress banned the shipment of slot machines to states which have laws against them.

Civil Defense — Against the background of furious warfare in Korea, Congress enacted a sweeping civil defense program setting up a Federal Civilian Defense Administration to coordinate federal and state government plans for protection of the population in the event of attack. A single Administrator was to handle the program, but certain of his powers were withheld until Congress or the President assented to their use by proclaiming a civil defense emergency.

Congress gave the President the so-called "war power" to renegotiate defense contracts to facilitate mobilization of the nation's economic strength. But lawmakers withheld additional war powers Mr. Truman had requested for reorganizing certain government agencies such as manpower and maritime commissions.

Reorganizations — However, Congress in 1950 endorsed 20 of 27 plans submitted by Mr. Truman for the reorganization of the executive branch of the government. Most of the plans submitted bore the approval of the Hoover Commission on schemes for more efficient federal operation. Notably rejected by Congress were plans to reorganize the National Labor Relations Board, revise Interstate Commerce Commission and Federal Communications Commission personnel, transfer the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to the Commerce Department and create a Department of Health, Education and Security. A related reorganization development saw enactment of a law facilitating operations of the Government Accounting Office.

A bill relaxing some of the provisions of the so-called Hatch "clean politics" Act barring civil servants from certain types of political activity was vetoed by the President because of an objectionable feature limiting the scope of the bill. Congress reenacted the legislation minus that feature, and the President signed it into law.

Rules Change — The House of Representatives altered one of its major rules and trimmed the power of the House Rules Committee to retain jurisdiction over bills it refused to clear to the House for floor action. The rule was altered to enable the chairman of any committee having a measure bottled up in the Rules group to force it out of that unit after the expiration of 21 days without Rules Committee action.

F. E. P. C. — One of the major measures brought to the floor under this "21-day-rule" was the bill to establish a Fair Employment Practices Commission. After a dozen false starts, the House finally acted upon a considerably watered-down version of this Administration-backed bill. The lower chamber amended it extensively, putting the sections designed to make discriminatory hiring practices unlawful on a voluntary, rather than compulsory, basis. The measure was passed after an extended series of parliamentary maneuvers waged by Southerners against its formal consideration in the first place. The Senate failed to consider the House-passed version on its own merits, although the bill was indirectly debated at various times in connection with efforts to bring it to the Senate floor for formal action. Several roll-call votes were taken during this procedure. Defeat of attempts to get formal action on the bill was tantamount to defeat of the bill itself.

A proposed Constitutional amendment altering the workings of the electoral college which assures the election of a President and Vice President was passed by the Senate in 1950, but failed to get through the House.

Statehood — Congress launched a $88.5 million ten-year program to rehabilitate Navajo and Hopi Indians in the Southwest and raise their living standards. But bills which would have conferred statehood on Alaska and Hawaii failed to become law. The House passed both of them— the Alaskan bill was the first of its kind ever voted upon— but they received no action in the Senate, although rated as "must" legislation by Administration leaders.

Personalities drew attention. Dozens of persons named by the President to federal judgeships were debated in Congress, and caused a number of formal roll-call votes — some of which flatly turned down the proposed appointments. Carroll O. Switzer, named to be an Iowa District Judge, and M. Neil Andrews, to be a Georgia U. S. judge, were among the rejected nominees.

Taxes And Economic Policy

Money to pay for the sky - rocketing costs of fighting the Korean war and preparing the U. S. and its allies for any other military eventuality was the goal of two whopping tax measures the 81st Congress put into law during the second session. The first major tax bill started out in the early months of the session as legislation to repeal a considerable number of World War II excise levies, and generally revise the income tax structure. As passed by the House, the tax bill reduced existing excises by better than $1 billion, and partially off-set this by boosting taxes on corporations by some $433 million.

But after the Korean fighting started, the tax bill took on an entirely different flavor, as expected. The excise repeal features of the bill were shelved. The legislation then went on to call for some $2.7 billion in additional taxes on individual incomes, and $1.5 billion yearly on corporation revenues. As it became law — and started nicking pay envelopes in October — the tax legislation was expected to increase federal revenues by some $4.5 billion annually. Numerous loopholes in previous tax laws were closed up.

Excess Profits — The second major tax measure was one concerned with the "excess profits" of corporations. Attempts to phrase legislation to tax such profits were made when the Congress was considering the regular tax bill. But both technical and political fights put action over to the last minutes of the "lame duck" session. As enacted into law then, the independent measure on excess profits was expected to provide $3.3 billion annually out of the earnings of big corporations. Methods of figuring the tax were set forth elaborately. The law was to run only until July 1, 1953.

Defense Production — Home - front mobilization — with controls on prices and wages if necessary — was studied by Congress, which on September 1 sent the President the Defense Production Act of 1950. This permitted the Administration to set priorities on defense materials and allocate them, to requisition property and guarantee or make certain loans. It authorized $600 million for this latter purpose alone, and set a $1.4 billion figure for future appropriations. It authorized the President to control wages and prices if voluntary stabilization did not work. A National Production Authority was to be created; an agency for stabilizing wages and prices was also set up.

The sweeping Act also authorized the President to take appropriate action to settle labor - management disputes and to regulate credit in wide fields. Dozens of other general provisions — such as one specifying that small business get a fair share of contracts — were included in the legislation.

Rent Controls — Existing controls on rental housing were continued. The Congress extended federal rent controls through Dec. 31, 1950, and then voted to extend them a second time, through March 31, 1951. A feature of the extension bills permitted local governments to retain controls at their own option for six months after the mandatory federal ones expired.

The Congress extended the government's synthetic rubber production program for an additional two years, to help offset an expected shortage in natural rubber from the usual supply areas. To help assure continued supplies of scrap metal, duties on imported scrap were suspended on some major items. However, a bill to suspend import duties on copper failed to get completed independent action.

Monopoly — Several Congressional actions dealt with monopoly. The President vetoed a bill Congress passed to exempt the so-called "basing point" pricing system from an unlawful status. The vetoed bill, its sponsors said, was to "clarify" the basing point system's relation to anti-trust statutes. Mr. Truman said the measure would have obscured the relationship instead. Congress failed to override the veto. Three anti-trust bills did become law, among them measures raising the penalties against violators and barring the merger of companies in trust-tainted circumstances.

Investigations were made into complaints of monopolistic practices in the steel and newsprint industries. Price rises in the steel industry prompted a series of hearings before committees of both the House and Senate. No specific legislation resulted.

Another Presidential veto in the economic policy field resulted from enactment of a bill which would have exempted producers of natural gas from Federal Power Commission regulation. Congress made no attempt to override the veto.

New Program — Using the omnibus approach for the first time since 1946, Congress passed a rivers, harbors and flood control bill which authorized some $1.5 billion for such projects, plus $200 million for Missouri River basin reclamation and $47 million for surveys of proposed related projects. Another big development measure was the $1.1 billion two-year program for building up the nation's highways.

Subsidies — Lawmakers weighed the tidelands oil controversy and the question of whether states' rights or federal ones came first, but no formal decision was put on the law books. Also failing to get completed action were bills attempting to separate air mail subsidies granted private carriers from other kinds of subsidies—usually operating ones. Lengthy hearings were held on the subsidy question.

Subsidies for shipping received considerable debate and scrutiny. Bills to extend federal aid to ship construction firms received industry and labor support at hearings, but failed to attract floor action. However, the Secretary of Commerce was authorized to issue special war-risk maritime insurance.

A bill clarifying the status of "freight forwarders" became law. The measure spelled out the rights and duties of truckers whose rights under previous "common carriers" legislation were sometimes subject to dispute.

Nominations — Several of the President's nominations in the economic policy field encountered Congressional resistance. After considerable debate and Senatorial opposition, the Senate confirmed Mr. Truman's re-nominations of Sumner Pike of Maine to the Atomic Energy Commission and Josh Lee of Oklahoma to the Civil Aeronautics Board.

But the Senate refused to confirm Frank E. Hook, former Michigan Congressman, to be a member of the Motor Carriers Claims Commission. Hook was rejected after Sen. Homer Ferguson (R Mich.) invoked an old Senatorial prerogative of declaring a nominee "personally obnoxious." Another nominee rejected was Martin A. Hutchinson of Virginia to be a member of the Federal Trade Commission. His appointment was strongly opposed by Sen. Harry F. Byrd (D Va.), against whom Hutchinson unsuccessfully campaigned in 1946 for a Senate seat. The Senate backed up Byrd's opposition to Hutchinson by a 59-14 vote.

Boxscore on Truman Program

When the second session of the 81st Congress closed its books, it had taken action on 78 of the 86 legislative proposals set before it by the President. Out of this total, 38 were enacted into law.

These totals were arrived at by Congressional Quarterly in a survey which showed that much of the activity was compressed into the last half of the year under the spur of the emergency.

For instance, at the time of the Korean invasion there were 60 proposals before Congress, and action had been taken on 47 of them as follows:

10 enacted into law
30 partial action
7 rejected

At election recess the number of proposals had grown to 74, and Congress had acted on 66, as follows:

31 enacted into law
9 rejected

At adjournment Jan. 2 there were 86 Presidential requests, and Congress had acted on 78, as follows:

38 enacted into law

At the end of the first session, Congress had granted some kind of action to 59 of 68 proposals before it. Of the 59, 30 were enacted into law, 3 rejected, and 26 received partial action (See CQ Almanac, Vol. V, 1949, p. 45.)

These conclusions are drawn from Congressional Quarterly's exclusive "boxscore" on the President's 1950 legislative proposals and how they fared in Congress. To compile its boxscore, CQ selects issues cited in Presidential messages, including those on the State of the Union, the Budget, the Economic Report, Tax Messages, and such other special messages as those on defense production, internal security, the military aid program, etc. This year a number of requests were submitted in the form of letters to Congressional leaders. Requests for appropriations are not included, since appropriations bills are, by law, not to include new legislation.

"Lame Duck" Session

The President sent a "must" list to the "lame duck" session which, in addition to supplemental defense appropriations, included (1) excess profits tax, (2) aid for Yugoslavia, (3) 3 - month extension of federal rent controls, (4) a federal civil defense program, (5) statehood for Hawaii and Alaska. He got action on all but the last.

The statehood bills ran into a Senate filibuster and had to be abandoned in favor of action on emergency legislation. However, the final session completed action on other bills the President had listed for action "if possible" — namely, tightening antitrust laws, and permitting union shops under the Railway Labor Act. Out of the 12 new proposals added to the list from messages sent to the lame duck session, six were enacted into law, five saw partial action, one stood rejected.

Earlier Rejections Stand

House committees early in the session had rejected legislation previously passed by the Senate to provide federal aid for medical training and for elementary and secondary education. No further action was taken in the "lame duck" session to push these bills through, although the President had again requested action. The same was true of the copper - import tax suspension which was tabled by the Senate Finance Committee before the election recess.

The President then requested action by the lame duck session, but attempts to get it through in the form of an amendment to other legislation were not successful.

Proposals Ignored

Proposals ignored throughout the session were mandatory price supports, the Brannan farm plan, unemployment insurance, scholarships for higher education, civil government for American Samoa, extension of Federal Reserve Board authority, creation of a Columbia Valley Administration, and extension of time limit on RFC loans.

Legislation Modified

Some of the action taken by Congress reflects its own views more strongly than those of the Administration. Thus, while Congress acted favorably on Selective Service extension, it was a one - year instead of the three - year extension requested. The first rent control extension was requested for one year, granted for six months (making necessary the emergency three - month extension in the lame duck session).

The House passed a Fair Employment Practices bill without the "teeth" requested by the Administration, but even this modified version could not get Senate approval.

Unrequested Action

Congress considers and acts upon much legislation not specifically requested by the President.

The 81st Congress sent the President over 900 public bills. Most of these were signed without comment. But some of them ran into vetoes. The President vetoed 12 public bills sent to him by the second session, but two were passed over his veto.

One of these was the Internal Security Act, which contained provisions the President had specifically opposed prior to passage — the Communist registration and alien detention features. The other was a bill authorizing out-patient treatment for Spanish-American war veterans.

The President fared better on requests growing out of the emergency than he did on so-called "Fair Deal" proposals. He did get an extended housing program, the long-asked-for National Science Foundation, and an improved social security program, but the rest of the "Fair Deal" program was largely ignored or rejected.

The international situation had its effect on the attitude of Congress toward legislation. Requests in the military and economic field which related to defense and holding the line on the economic home front got prompt attention. The President's requests in foreign policy — especially that part of foreign policy designed to "stop communism abroad"—got quick and favorable action. On the other hand, the determination of Congress to "stop communism at home" by the means it thought best led to the overriding of President Truman's veto of the McCarran bill.

KEY VOTES - 81st CONGRESS

Of the hundreds of formal roll-call ballots the 81st Congress took during its two-year span on thousands of bills before it in 1949-50, a few loomed high above all others. This was because they were votes which decided far-reaching subjects affecting great segments not only of the American people but also those of nations abroad. Foreign policy ballots were examples of the latter.

Some of the dramatic votes indicated the change the character of the 81st Congress underwent during its service. During the first session, for example, the lawmakers were concerned much of the time with domestic issues and the Administration's "Fair Deal" programs. But half-way through the second session, U. S. troops engaged in warfare for the first time since the end of World War II. And after the invasion of Korea in June, the Congress moved rapidly onto a semi-war footing.

The changes in the temper of individual Congressmen and some of the major issues involved are reflected in the following four Congressional Quarterly Almanac pages of "Key Votes" — for both sessions. Ten key ballots taken by the House in 1949 and ten taken in the Senate have been selected, as well as ten key votes in each chamber during 1950. Each lawmaker's recorded decision is given individually on every test.

Basis of Selection

The ballots have been selected as the most representative examples of an individual's performance on salient issues. But not all the votes selected as key ones were those final ballots which assured the passage or defeat of legislation. Several apply to crucial amendments or parliamentary moves connected with a specific bill. This kind of vote is often a better indication of a measure's true backing than the final vote on it. The reason is that final votes are frequently "bandwagon jumps", after a bill's opponents see that their attempts to kill the measure outright have failed.

What Went Before

As a background against which the key-voting of the 81st Congress can be examined, Congressional Quarterly presents charts on key ballots taken since 1945. The charts begin on page 43. Votes cast by individuals serving in the earlier Congresses are given, together with brief descriptions of the nature of each vote and its outcome. (For a fuller description of these votes, refer to CQ Almanacs, Vols. I, II, III and IV.)

HOUSE VOTES

The ten key votes in the House of Representatives during the 1949 session were sprinkled among the fields of agriculture, labor, welfare, civil rights, economic policy, veterans affairs and foreign policy. By these ten ballots, Representatives beat back a determined effort to alter basically the government's reciprocal trade agreements with other nations — a key part of U. S. commercial policy internationally. Also in the foreign policy field, the House slashed millions of dollars off the sum the Administration wished to earmark for military aid to nations in the newly-formed North Atlantic Treaty.

Other 1949 key votes defeated plans to give veterans of both world wars $90 monthly for life after they reached 65, to put the government's farm price support program on a flexible instead of a rigid computation basis, and to amend the Taft-Hartley labor law. But additional ballots raised the national minimum hourly wage to 75 cents and preserved the heart of the long-range slum clearance and low-cost public housing program.

Moreover, key votes in 1949 were those which waived poll-taxes as a prerequisite for voting, cleared the way for a vote on the bill liberalizing the social security program and exempted producers of natural gas from the jurisdiction of the Federal Power Commission. (For detailed stories on the legislative histories of issues settled in 1949 by these key votes, refer to CQ Almanac, Vol. V.)

Among the key votes the House took in 1950 were those rejecting a $60 million "Little ECA" for Korea in January — although this decision was later reversed — defeating attempts to kill the "Point Four" plan to aid underdeveloped countries, and preventing a halt in debate on the taxation of excess profits. Others trimmed $600 million off the onmibus appropriations bill, rescinded an order cutting postal services, and watered down the enforcement provisions of the bill to create a Fair Employment Practice Commission.

The remaining key votes during the second session deleted the co-operative loan section of the bill authorizing a housing program for middle-income families, affirmed the exemption of natural gas producers from FPC control, extended federal rent controls for six months and rejected an attempt to confine the Defense Production Act's credit restrictions to consumer and real estate credit alone. (Refer to the index of this Almanac for detailed stories on the foregoing.)

SENATE VOTES

The crucial ballots in the Senate during 1949 were similar to those CQ selected in the House. Senate key votes rejected attempts to change the chamber's rules on unlimited debate, to cut foreign economic aid by ten per cent, to alter basically the Taft - Hartley labor law, to revise the Southwestern Power Administration, to attach the national minimum hourly wage to the cost - of - living index, to put receiprocal trade agreements on a "peril points" basis, and to revise the farm price support program.

Other first session key votes in the upper chamber launched the five - year low - cost housing program, endorsed federal aid-to-education, and inaugurated the military assistance program for nations in the North Atlantic Alliance. (For detailed stories on the legislative histories of issues settled in 1949 by these key votes, refer to CQ Almanac, Vol. V.)

In the Senate during the protracted second session of the 81st Congress, key votes selected by CQ were those which: increased the borrowing power of the Commodity Credit Corporation by $2 billion, cut ten per cent off funds earmarked for federal non - defense spending, deleted the co-op loan section of the middle - income housing bill, authorized a "Point Four" program along an Administration-backed pattern, and again exempted natural gas producers from FPC control.

The key ballots also extended federal rent controls for an additional six months and, in connection with the Defense Production Act required that wage controls be imposed if price controls were instituted.

PARTY UNITY

BIPARTISAN SUPPORT

ON the RECORD

Party Unity, 81st Congress

"Party unity," as exclusively compiled by Congressional Quarterly, is a measure of a Congressman's support of his own party against the other party. It presents the number and percentage of times a lawmaker votes, pairs or otherwise declares himself with the majority of his own party when it meets head-on with the majority of the other party.

The computation of party unity is made on the basis of only those formal roll-calls on which a majority of Democrats vote one way and a majority of Republicans the other. It excludes roll-calls on which a majority of both parties votes the same way.

PARTY STANDINGS

When it came to party-line clashes in the 81st Congress, Democrats in the Senate stood closer together politically than their GOP colleagues, but Republicans in the House of Representatives displayed more party unity regularly than the Democrats did.

This situation — with the Democrats leading in the upper chamber but the GOP having an edge in the House— prevailed in both sessions of the 81st Congress: the 1949 one and the protracted second session which lasted through 1950 into 1951. (For 1949 party unity statistics exclusively, see CQ Almanac, Vol. V, pages 55 and 61.)

According to CQ's exclusive party unity figures — compiled only on the basis of roll-call votes in the 81st Congress on which a majority of Democrats voted one way and a majority of Republicans balloted exactly opposite to them — this was the overall picture, including both sessions:

Senate Average

Between Jan. 3, 1949, when the 81st Congress' first session convened and Jan. 2, 1951, when the second session formally ended, the Senate took 292 roll-call votes which were distinctly party-line ones. Over the course of these votes, the Democratic Senators achieved a "party unity" average of 81.1 per cent. That is, the average Democrat supported his party's majority 81.1 per cent of the time during its partisan clashes with the GOP.

The average Republican "party unity" achievement over these same 292 partisan roll-call votes was 76.3 per cent.

House Average

In the House of Representatives, 138 strictly party-line ballots were taken over the comparable period. Over their course, the Democrats racked up a party unity percentage of 79.84. Topping this, the Republican average was 82.04 per cent.

Previous Comparison

Breaking the cumulative 81st Congress party percentages down by sessions, this is how the Democrats and Republicans fared at the first one (1949) and at the second (1950-1.):

Senate Democrats in 1949 averaged 81.0 per cent over the course of 144 party-line record votes cast at the first session. At that time, the Democrats nosed out the GOP's average of 77.8 per cent in the Senate at the first session. At the second session, when 148 roll-calls were partisan, Senate Democrats averaged 81.6 per cent, again beating the GOP average of 75.0 per cent.

House Democrats in 1949 averaged 79.8 per cent over the course of 65 party-line tallies, trailing the GOP average of 83.4 per cent. In 1950, at the second session, the Democratic average of 79.76 over the course of 73 partisan votes again trailed the GOP average of 80.57 per cent.

INDIVIDUALS

Highest ranking members of the Senate during the full span of the 81st Congress were Sens. Claude Pepper (D Fla.) and Edward Martin (R Pa.), who led all other members of their respective parties with "party unity" percentages of 97 and 95 respectively.

Trailing all members of their respective parties were Sens. Harry F. Byrd (D Va.) and Wayne Morse (R Ore.), each of whom had a percentage of 35.

In the House of Representatives, Rep. John A. Carroll (Colo.) led all Democrats with a percentage of 100. Leading all Republicans were Reps. Errett P. Scrivner (Kan.), Daniel A. Reed (N.Y.), and Cliff Clevenger (Ohio), each with an average of 98.

Reps. Jacob K. Javits (R N. Y.) and John E. Rankin (D Miss.) trailed all members of their parties with averages of 27 and 36 respectively.

PARTY UNITY FIGURES FOR ALL SENATORS ARE LISTED ON PAGE 47; FIGURES FOR REPRESENTATIVES ARE SET FORTH ON PAGES 48 AND 49. The charts are set up to indicate data in eight columns, as follows:

1. Times lawmaker voted with his party majority on party-line tests, 1949.

2. Times he voted against his majority, 1949.

3. Per cent of the time he supported majority, first session.

4. Times he voted with majority on party-line tests, 1950.

5. Times he voted against his majority, 1950.

6. Per cent of the time he supported majority, second session.

7. Per cent of the time he supported majority throughout 81st Congress (first and second sessions.)

8. Per cent of the time he supported majority during the previous 80th Congress (1947-48.)

(For "highs" and "lows" among Democrats and Republicans in both Senate and House in 1949 exclusively, and during the 80th Congress as well, see CQ Almanac, Vol. V, pages 55 and 61.)

Regional Factors

Virtually every Congressman's party unity percentage fluctuates from year to year—even as the cohesion of his party itself varies. The reason for the rise and fall of party unity percentages involves certain factors which shape a Congressman's attitude, but which are not always reflected by his specific votes. In one word, the factors which help shape a Congressman's approach to any issue can be described as "regional".

For example, CQ's voting surveys indicate that on some questions of public power, Western Congressmen tend to ballot as Westerners, instead of voting primarily as Democrats or Republicans. On numerous foreign policy and maritime matters, Congress also tends to split along coastal-vs.-inland lines, instead of dividing into Democrat or GOP blocs.

In the agricultural field, moreover, lawmakers often line up as representatives of rural or urban constituencies, instead of grouping along party lines. In addition, regional allegiance often supplants party regularity on such controversial measures as the FEPC or DP or reclamation projects.

All of these factors enter into the subject of a Congressman's standing in connection with party loyalty—and that is why a party's average varies from year to year even though the members of the party sitting in Congress may remain roughly the same.

PARTY DEFECTIONS

Party defection — the obverse of party unity — was an important factor in the 81st Congress. It took on added significance in the second session, when many of the measures before the lawmakers were weighed against a backdrop of warfare. (Since the character of the second session was radically different from the complexion of the 1949 one, the following survey has been restricted to party defections in 1950. For data on defections in 1949 — which can be amalgamated into a picture of the 81st Congress as a whole — see CQ Almanac, Vol. V, pages 56 and 62.)

Votes cast by lawmakers who bolted their party ranks were decisive on some two - thirds of the Senate and one - half of the House party-line ballots taken in 1950. Most Democratic bolters were Southerners. GOP Senators crossed party lines often on foreign policy. The Democrats rarely did.

Senate Bolting

Of 148 Senate party - unity roll-calls during the second session, 94 were decided by bolters. The Republicans lost 61 of them because of defections from the GOP ranks. The Democrats lost 33 for the same reason.

In other words, each party would have won that number of balloting tests if some members had not crossed party lines and voted with the opposing party's majority in sufficient number to defeat the wishes of their own bloc's majority.

House Bolting

Out of 73 strictly partisan tallies in the House of Representatives during the second session, 34 were decided by members who defected from their party ranks. The Democrats lost 21 of these ballots. The Republicans lost 13.

Comparison With 1949

Comparable figures for the first session of the 81st Congress in 1949 show that out of 144 party-line tallies in the Senate, the Democrats lost 36 and the GOP lost 60 because of defections. In the House, there were 65 strictly partisan ballots. The Democrats lost 21 because of desertions, and the Republicans lost 10.

(For a description of the nature of 1949 issues settled by votes decided by bolters, see CQ Almanac, Vol. V, page 55.)

ISSUES INVOLVED

Bolters who crossed party lines during the second session settled a number of significant issues. Moreover, specific types of legislation caused defections among the same groups of lawmakers. In the Senate, for example, the Democrats lost eight partisan roll-call contests on appropriations matters because of defections. On seven of these, there were three Senators who did not fail to oppose the Democratic majority. They were Sens. Harry Flood Byrd (D Va.), Paul Douglas (Ill.) and Spessard Holland (Fla.).

On the other hand, the GOP lost 12 partisan roll-calls on appropriations because of Republican defections, which involved a recurring group of three Senators who bucked their party's majority. Nine out of 12 times Sens. Edward Thye (Minn.), H. Alexander Smith (N. J.), Wayne Morse (Ore.) and Gurney (S. D.) voted with the Democrats.

Senate

Because they had greater party unity—and consequently less of a problem from defections—Democrats in the Senate during the second session were able to win major party-line roll-call votes from the Republicans. The following are typical Democratic wins, snatched from the GOP only because a decisive number of Republicans voted with the Democrats:

Approval of $4 million for the Office of Housing Expediter's rent control program, which the GOP majority opposed. Rejection of a Republican-backed motion to recommit the bill exempting natural gas producers from federal regulation. Rejection of a Republican-backed move to cut $500 million from Marshall Plan authorizations. Rejection of a GOP-endorsed move to earmark $50 million of Marshall Plan funds for Spain. Approval of the Administration's "Point Four" program, which Republicans had tried to kill in favor of a substitute plan. Confirmation of Sumner Pike to be Atomic Energy Commission head, over the opposition of the Republican majority. Approval of bill continuing rent controls, which bill the GOP majority opposed.

Among the partisan contests the Republicans won from the Democrats because a decisive number of the latter bolted their party and voted with the GOP majority, these were typical issues:

Deletion of the Democratic-sponsored provision in the bill authorizing housing for middle income families that would have permitted a $2 billion loan to housing cooperatives. Cut of $250 million in Marshall Plan authorizations, which the Democratic majority had attempted to preserve intact. Rejection of Administration - backed plan to reorganize the National Labor Relations Board. Adoption of an amendment to the Defense Production Act, which provided that wage controls be imposed if price controls were; the Democratic majority opposed this. Approval of final version of the "basing point" bill, which the Democratic majority attacked.

House

The situation was reversed in the House during the second session. The Democrats, with less party unity than the GOP, lost more close votes because of this than the Republicans did. This is how it shaped up on the basis of typical issues:

The Democrats opposed moves to reduce the funds for public housing, to delete the $2 billion cooperative housing loan and to adopt the so-called "natural gas" bill — but enough Democrats defected from their party's majority and voted with the GOP to override the Democratic opposition. Conversely, the Democratic majority favored recommittal of the so - called "basing point" bill, but the GOP successfully opposed recommital with the help of dissident Democrats.

However, the Republicans lost votes too. The GOP majority, for example, opposed measures revising cotton acreage restriction, conferring statehood on Alaska and authorizing the extension of rent controls. But enough Republicans strayed from the GOP majority to enable the Democrats to pass those bills with the extra GOP voting strength.

INDIVIDUAL BOLTERS

In the Senate during the second session, Harry F. Byrd (D Va.) differed more often with his party majority than any other Democrat on the 33 party-line roll-call ballots lost by Democrats because of splits within the party. Byrd bolted 23 times. The Republican Senator differing most often with his party on the 61 roll-calls the GOP lost because of defections was Edward J. Thye (R Minn.). He bolted 40 times.

On the other hand, Sen. Frank P. Graham (D N. C.) led all other Democrats in standing firm with his party's majority on the 33 votes. Over their course, he did not bolt once. Among Republicans, Sen. Arthur H. Vandenberg (R Mich.) was the most steadfast. He did bolt once.

In the House, Rep. J. Frank Wilson (Tex.) bolted the Democratic majority 17 times out of the 21 votes settled by Democratic defections. He led all other Democrats in this respect. The Republicans who strayed most from GOP ranks over the course of 13 tests the GOP lost through defections were Reps. Dayton E. Phillips (Tenn.), and Hal Holmes (Wash.). Each bolted at least 10 times.

But 3 Democrats and 24 Republicans did not differ even a single time with their party majorities during the crucial party-line votes on which these lawmakers actually balloted.

Comparison With 1949

In 1949, at the first session, Byrd also was the most chronic Democratic bolter in the Senate. The Republican who strayed the most was Sen. William Langer (N.D.).

Bolting Democratic ranks in the House most often during 1949 were Reps. Thomas G. Abernethy (Miss.), James C. Davis (Ga.), W. M. (Don) Wheeler (Ga.) and John Bell Williams (Miss.). The most chronic Republican maverick was Clifford P. Case (N.J.).

Members of the 81st Congress had a total of 383 opportunities to put their opinions "on the record" during the second session. This was the combined number of formal roll-call votes in both the Senate and the House during 1950 and the final hours of the Congress in 1951.

Most Congressmen took advantage of these chances to make their positions clear. The majority of Senators and Representatives either cast ballots or — if unable to do so because of illness, enforced absence or official travel — registered their opinions in any one of several ways, according to Congressional Quarterly's exclusive survey.

Basis For Data

On-the-record data produced by the CQ survey reflects an individual lawmaker's willingness to make his opinion a matter of public knowledge by:

1. Voting "Yea" or "Nay" when his name was called on formal, record votes.

2. Arranging a pair with a Congressman whose opinion was opposite. "General" pairs — which register no opinions — are excluded.

3. Making a public announcement of what his vote would have been if he had been able actually to cast one.

4. Responding to the Congressional Quarterly Poll. Congressmen who have not been listed on key ballots are regularly polled by CQ and asked how they would have voted. Responses to the CQ Poll have been included in on-the-record tabulations.

Chamber Averages

During the second session of the 81st Congress, there were 229 roll-call votes in the Senate, and 154 in the House. The CQ on-the-record survey of this span revealed that:

The average Senator's position was recorded on a fraction more than 201 of the 229 issues decided by roll-call votes. The fraction derives from the statistical computation of the average. This put the average Senator on-the-record 87.9 per cent of the time. At the first session in 1949, the Senate had an on-the-record average of 90.2 per cent.

The average Representative went on-the-record on 129 of the 154 issues settled by roll calls in the House. Expressed in a percentage, the average lower chamber lawmaker was on-the-record 84.0 per cent of the time in 1950. The average percentage for the House in 1949 was 86.35.

The lower percentages achieved in 1950 led to some talk in Congressional quarters of possibly invoking an old law designed to prevent absenteeism in Congress. The old statute provided for docking the pay of lawmakers for the time they were absent from the floors of their chambers, and thus unable to go on-the-record when their names were called. However, it was asserted that the law had not been used since 1867. The statute itself was passed when Congresses abandoned the early system of paying lawmakers on a daily, per diem basis and instead granted them annual salaries.

Individual Percentages

Individual records for all Senators and all Representatives serving through the second session begin in the charts starting on page 63. The number of times each one actually voted, the number of times he paired, and his general on-the-record percentage derived are given. A percentage computation for his on-the-record standing in 1949 at the first session is also given for comparison.

SENATE

Over the course of the 229 formal roll-call votes settling various issues before the Senate in 1950, seven Senators—five Democrats and two Republicans—were recorded 99 per cent of the time. However, no Senator of either party was recorded on every vote. The seven Senators whose high on-the-record percentages reflected their diligence in making their views known whenever a feasible opportunity to do so presented itself were:

Senators Lister Hill (D Ala.), John J. Williams (R Del.), John C. Stennis (D Miss.), Spessard L. Holland (D Fla.), Robert C. Hendrickson (R N.J.), Herbert H. Lehman (D-Lib N.Y.) and Harley M. Kilgore (D W.Va.).

In the next lofty bracket were two Democrats on-the-record 97 per cent of the time, and four Republicans with percentages of 98.

Among the Senators with relatively low on-the-record percentages for the second session—with their records following their names—were: Arthur H. Vandenberg (R Mich.) 32; Sheridan Downey (D Calif.) 45; Garrett Withers (D Ky.) 69; Elmer Thomas (D Okla.) 65; Claude Pepper (D Fla.) 73; and Milton R. Young (R N.D.) 73.

For the names of Senators who were among the leaders of their parties in going on-the-record in 1949 at the first session, see page 59, CQ Almanac, Vol. V. Names of Senators who trailed most of their colleagues in 1949 are also given.

The on-the- record percentages of some Senators rose in 1950 over their 1949 achievements — and some Senators lost ground. The rise or fall may be determined by comparing columns four and five on the following charts.

HOUSE

During the 154 roll-call votes in the House in the second session, four Democrats and seven Republicans were on-the-record each time. They actually voted or made their positions known through pairs or announcements at each opportunity. They were: Reps. Frank M. Karsten (D Mo.), Wilbur D. Mills (D Ark.), Robert T. Secrest (D Ohio), John B. Sullivan (D Mo.), C. W. Bishop (R Ill.), John W. Byrnes (R Wis.), Charles H. Elston (R Ohio), John W. Heselton (R Mass.), Hal Holmes (R Wash.), Merlin Hull (R Wis.) and Kenneth B. Keating (R N.Y.).

Close behind these "100 per centers were eight Democrats and two Republicans who expressed themselves 99 per cent of the time when issues were settled by formal votes.

At the other extreme, two Democrats and one Republican went on-the-record 40 per cent of the time. They were Reps. T. Vincent Quinn (D N.Y.), George G. Sadowski (D Mich.) and Frank B. Keefe (R Wis.).

For the names of Democrats and Republicans who had relatively high on-the-record percentages in 1949 at the first session, see page 63, CQ Almanac, Vol. V. The names of Representatives with relatively low records are also given. The 1949 percentages for all members are set forth as well, for comparative purposes with the 1950 standings. The rise or fall in members' percentages can be determined from these.

Senate "On the Record" Data

1. Number of times Senator voted "Yea", "Nay", or "Present" on 229 roll calls from Jan. 3, 1950 to Jan. 2, 1951.

2. Number of times he paired (other than making a General Pair, which does not indicate an opinion), announced, or answered the CQ Poll.

3. Total number of times he thus got "on the record" through votes, pairs (other than General), announcements or CQ Poll responses, over the course of 229 roll calls.

4. Per cent of the time Senator was "on the record" during the second session.

5. Per cent of time he was "on the record" in 1949.

House "On the Record" Data

1. Number of times Representative voted "Yea", "Nay", or "Present" on 154 roll calls from Jan. 3, 1950 to Jan. 2, 1951.

2. Number of times he paired (other than making a General Pair, which does not indicate an opinion), announced, or answered the CQ Poll.

3. Total number of times he thus got "on the record" through votes, pairs (other than General), announcements or CQ poll responses, over the course of 154 roll calls.

4. Per cent of the times the Representative was "on the record" during the second session.

5. Per cent of time he was "on the record" in 1949.

(Note: Speaker Sam Rayburn (D Tex.) ordinarily does not vote and was omitted from "on the record" calculations. Six vacancies in the House at close of the surveyed period were not considered in determining percentages, which are based on the actual membership.)

Bipartisan Support - 81st Congress

Congressional Quarterly's "bipartisan support" data is designed to indicate an individual Congressman's willingness to go along with the position of both the Democratic and Republican majorities when the two parties make common cause over a particular issue. The statistics reveal a Congressman's support of majority opinion thus registered when a majority of Democrats and a majority of Republicans vote the same way.

The Congressman may show his support of the combined Democratic-Republican position by voting the same way as the consolidated majorities do, or by pairing in their favor or otherwise announcing his support of their stand.

Bipartisan issues are considered those on which there is no substantial difference — determined according to the actual ballot — between the two parties, even though there may be some controversy within each party. As long as a majority of one party votes the same way as the majority of the other party does, the size of the majority — whether a large edge or a small margin — does not affect the statistical basis. When the members of one party split evenly on an issue, the vote is considered by CQ to be a bipartisan one.

The bipartisan-support figures set forth on individual lawmakers in the following CQ survey have been computed on the basis only of those formal roll-call votes which found a majority of Democrats and a majority of Republicans voting the same way. The so-called "party unity" votes — on which the majorities of the two parties clash head on — have been excluded. Moreover, bipartisan-support figures for an individual are computed only on the basis of those bipartisan votes in which the Congressman actually took part — not on the basis of all the bipartisan votes taken.

SUMMARY

During the two-year span (1949-50) of the 81st Congress, Republicans in the House of Representatives supported legislation which commanded bipartisan backing more often than did their Democratic colleagues. But in the Senate, the Democrats were more prone to support this kind of legislation than the GOP members were.

There were more bipartisan votes in the Senate, which took 164 during the 81st Congress, than in the House, which took 136. The CQ bipartisan-support survey showed that over the past four years, however, about half of the House votes were bipartisan; only about a third of those in the Senate had the support of majorities of both parties.

In the 81st Congress, votes in both the House and Senate were more likely to command the backing of both major parties if the ballots came on legislation dealing with the Defense Department and veterans affairs. They were less likely to draw bipartisan favor if they dealt with taxes or housing.

The majorities of both parties often reached agreement on final votes only after taking a series of partisan ones on several phases of a measure. This particular process — where bitter partisan wrangling and voting marked the extended consideration of a bill which finally was passed in the last instance by a bipartisan vote — was undergone by some major bills.

An example in the Senate in 1950, for instance, was the final bipartisan vote continuing the Marshall Plan and inaugurating the so-called "Point Four" program to assist underdeveloped countries. The "Point Four" section of the bill caused repeated party-line show-downs before the rest of the measure containing it was passed by a comfortable Democratic-Republican combined tally.

An example in the House was ultimate passage of legislation providing insured loans for housing for middle-income families.

SENATE

During the 81st Congress, first and second sessions, the Senate took a total of 456 roll-call votes, of which 164 were bipartisan. On these, a majority of Republicans and a majority of Democrats voted the same way. The two parties compared as follows:

The average bipartisan-support percentage achieved in the Senate by the Democratic party was 80.5. This meant that when a vote was taken on an issue supported by the combined Democratic-Republican majorities, the typical Democrat could be counted upon to join in 80.5 per cent of the time.

The average bipartisan-support figure for the Republican party in the Senate during the 81st Congress as a whole was 72.6 per cent.

Previous Comparisons

When the average party percentages for the entire 81st Congress are broken down by years, the following picture appears. There were 83 bipartisan ballots in the Senate during 1949, the first session. Over their course, the average Democratic bipartisan-support figure was 81.9 per cent. The GOP percentage averaged 73.8.

In 1950, during the protracted second session, there were 81 bipartisan roll calls. Over their course, the average Democratic percentage was 79.6, and the GOP figure was 73.4.

In the 80th Congress — which the Republicans controlled during 1947-48 —the respective Democratic and GOP bipartisan-support averages were 78.5 and 82.5 per cent. (For greater detail on the 80th Congress, refer to CQ Almanac, Vol. IV, pages 37-39.)

What Issues Were

Typical first session issues drawing bipartisan support from the Democratic and Republican parties alike in 1949 were those establishing flexible federal price supports for farmers, endorsing the idea of federal aid to state educational systems, launching the arms aid program to Atlantic Treaty nations resisting communism and attempting to alter Senate rules governing the termination of filibusters.

In 1950 at the second session, typical bipartisan ballots extended the peacetime draft, expanded the social security program, and authorized an investigation of interstate gambling and racketeering.

Individual Standings

Republicans and Democrats were almost equal with respect to achieving relatively high bipartisan-support records during the 81st Congress. This is the way Senators grouped at the top and bottom:

Sens. Arthur H. Vandenberg (R Mich.), Robert S. Kerr (D Okla.) and Lester C. Hunt (D Wyo.) led all other members of their respective parties with bipartisan-support figures of 94.0 and 93.0 for the 81st Congress. And at the other extreme, Sens. William Langer (R N.D.) and Glen H. Taylor (D Idaho) trailed all members of their parties with bipartisan-support percentages of 47.0 and 63.0 respectively.

Bipartisan-support figures for all other Senators are given in the chart on page 70. The columns list the actual number of times a Senator voted with a combined Democratic-Republican majority on bipartisan ballots in 1950, the number of times he bucked the combined majorities in 1950 and, accordingly, his second session percentage. The same data is given for the first session in 1949. For comparative purposes, the 80th Congress percentage is given for those individuals who were serving at that time.

(For "highs" and "lows" among Democrats and Republicans when it came to bipartisan-support in 1949 exclusively, see CQ Almanac, Vol. V, page 59.)

HOUSE

In the House of Representatives during the first and second sessions of the 81st Congress, there were a total of 275 roll-call votes, of which 136 were bipartisan ballots.

Over the course of these bipartisan tallies commanding the support of a Democratic majority and a GOP majority alike, the average Democrat went along with the combined blocs 82.4 per cent of the time. The average Republican bipartisan-support figure was 85.9 per cent.

Previous Comparisons

There were 55 bipartisan ballots in the House during the first session in 1949. During this series, the Democrats in the lower chamber averaged a bipartisan-support figure of 85.9 per cent, and the Republicans a figure of 84.3 per cent.

During the 1950 second session, which lasted into 1951, there were 81 bipartisan roll-calls in the House. Comparable averages over their course were a bipartisan-support percentage of 79.8 for the Democratic party, and a 93.4 percentage for the GOP.

The average bipartisan-support percentage for House Democrats during the 80th Congress in 1947-8 was 80.9. The average figure for Republican members, who dominated the House, was 87.4 per cent. (For greater detail on the 80th Congress, refer to the CQ Almanac, Vol. IV, pages 37-43.)

What Issues Were

At the first session, typical bipartisan ballots were those by which the combined Democratic - Republican majorities increased disability allowances for World War I veterans, approved the First Deficiency Appropriations Bill, endorsed the idea of a 70-group Air Force and decided to continue debate on the controversial "basing point" bill affecting the pricing systems of corporations engaged in interstate commerce.

Typical votes during the 1950 second session when lawmakers on both sides of the aisle jointly supported an issue were those which chopped $600 million out of the so-called "omnibus" appropriations bill for government agencies, and which passed the bill to confer statehood on Hawaii. Two additional examples were the bipartisan ballots which extended the statute of limitations with respect to prosecuting cases involving the unauthorized disclosure of classified governmental information, and which passed legislation granting more federal aid to housing projects for middle-income families.

Individual Standings

House members of each party generally had higher bipartisan-support averages than their party colleagues in the Senate. Republicans in the lower chamber, moreover, had the highest and lowest bipartisan averages for the 81st Congress, both sessions.

This is the way Representatives bunched:

Democrats were led by Rep. Thurman C. Crook (Ind.) who had an average of 97.0 per cent. Close behind him, with bipartisan-support percentages of 96 were nine other Democrats: Reps. Winfield K. Denton (Ind.), Carl D. Perkins (Ky.), Edward A. Garmatz (Md.), Thomas J. Lane (Mass.), Morgan M. Moulder (Mo.), Phil J. Welch (Mo.), James F. Lind (Pa.), M. G. Burnside (W. Va.), and E. H. Hedrick (W. Va.).

Topping these Democrats were Republican Representatives James T. Patterson (Conn.), James C. Auchincloss (N.J.), L. W. Hall (N.Y.), and Dayton E. Phillips (Tenn.). They had bipartisan-support percentages of 98.0.

At the other extreme, among members who voted often enough to give their records significance, Reps. Clare Hoffman (R Mich.) and Noah M. Mason (R Ill.) had percentages of 49 and trailed all Republicans. Rep. Noble J. Gregory (D Ky.) trailed all other Democrats with a percentage of 58. Also in this "low" category—with their percentages given after their names—were: Reps. Wint Smith (R Kan.) 51; Robert F. Rich (R Pa.) 50; Sam Hobbs (D Ala.) 64; John E. Rankin (D Miss.) 60; Stephen Pace (D Ga.) 63; J. B. Williams (D Miss.) 62; Arthur Winstead (D Miss.) 63; Howard W. Smith (D Va.) 60; and John Taber (R N.Y.) 61.

Bipartisan-support figures for all other Representatives are given in the charts beginning on page 68. This data includes statistics for the 81st Congress as a whole, both first and second sessions, and also for each session separately. Bipartisan-support percentages for lawmakers who also served in the 80th Congress are given for comparison.

CCC Borrowing Power

HR 6567 – P.L. 579

SUMMARY

The Commodity Credit Corporation started off 1950 with a request to increase its borrowing authority by $2 billion, bringing it to a total of $6.75 billion. The additional money was needed, according to Secretary of Agriculture Charles Brannan, to carry out the mandatory price supports on certain crops which Congress granted farmers under terms of the Agriculture Act of 1949. (See CQ Almanac, Vol. V, Page 131). The CCC finances these price supports by borrowing money from the U. S. Treasury

Identical bills to increase the CCC's borrowing authority were introduced in Congress in January. Rep. Brent Spence (D Ky.), chairman of the House Banking and Currency Committee, introduced HR 6567 in the House, and Sen. Elmer Thomas (D Okla.), chairman of the Agriculture and Forestry Committee, introduced S 2826 in the Senate.

There was little opposition to the bills as simple amendments to the Commodity Credit Charter of 1938, seeking to increase the agency's borrowing authority. Since Congress was already committed to support certain basic crops by loans or purchases, and to support certain other commodities, too, Capitol Hill generally agreed that the CCC needed the increased authority it requested.

However, the bills faced a Congress that was concerned over great piles of surplus potatoes and other government-purchased stocks of commodities. Repeated attempts were made, especially in the Senate, to link the problems of these surpluses to the question of increasing the borrowing power of the CCC.

One of the recurring proposals arising from attempts to connect surpluses with the CCC involved a curb on imports from other countries of commodities which competed with U. S. price-supported products.

Riders, Amendments

The contention was made, principally by West Coast Senators, that the government should shut off or limit such imports. A rider proposed to HR 6567 by Sen. Warren Magnuson (D Wash.) and Sen. Wayne Morse (R Ore.), was designed especially to discourage imports of fruits and nuts. It was accepted but was later "watered down" to make it acceptable to the State Department and to align it with reciprocal trade agreements.

The CCC also encountered an attack by Sen. John J. Williams (R Del.) who made charges against the auditing procedures and records of CCC, and demanded that the agency's accountants explain a "missing $366 million" from wartime funds.

Sen. Edward J. Thye (R Minn.) hurled still another charge against CCC, accusing it of not utilizing private trade facilities in handling the government grain program. His charge reflected complaints of a large number of grain trade spokesmen who had accused Department of Agriculture officials of trying to put them out of business and to "nationalize the entire agriculture economy"

Thye eventually put his protest in the form of an amendment specifying that the CCC should use "usual and customary channels of trade and commerce" in handling agricultural commodities.

The bill, with both the Thye amendment and the Magnuson rider, was reported out of the Senate Committee on March 8.

Recommittal

But five days later, after Secretary of Agriculture Brannan had requested an opportunity to register his disapproving views on the Thye amendment, the Senate recommitted the measure so that hearings could be reopened and Brannan given a chance to testify.

Meanwhile, across the Capitol, the House Banking and Currency Committee completed hearings on the measure March 6. On March 10 it reported the bill to the House after rejecting an amendment to require CCC to use private storage facilities for surplus commodities in preference to government - owned storage. The rejected amendment was similar to the Thye proposal which had been adopted in the Senate group.

On March 24, the House approved the bill by a voice vote after defeating more than a half-dozen amendments.

The Senate Committee, after hearing Brannan's objections to the Thye amendment on S 2826, accepted the House bill on March 30. It added the Magnuson-Morse rider and reported the bill to the Senate for the second time.

On June 7 at 1 a. m., the bill as reported by the Senate Committee passed the Senate by a vote of 46-5. Because the House and Senate bills differed, they were sent to a conference committee for harmonization.

Conference

Conferees of the House and Senate agreed to "water down" the Magnuson import rider to a compromise version supported by the Department of State to prevent any restrictions on imports from interfering with international agreements.

On June 21, the House adopted the conference report 235-81. On June 26, the Senate adopted the report, 35-35, with Vice President Barkley affirmatively breaking the tie.

The President signed the measure June 28.

Provisions

1. Amend the CCC Charter of 1938 to increase the agency's borrowing authority from $4.75 billion to $6.75 billion.

2. Amend the Agricultural Adjustment Act of 1933, Section 22, to place certain restrictions on imports of farm commodities when they interfere with domestic farm programs.

3. Require the Secretary of Agriculture to notify the President whenever he believes foreign farm imports threaten domestic farm programs. The President is directed in event of notification to call for an investigation by the Tariff Commission, which would report its findings back to the White House.

4. Stipulate that no proclamation arising from such a situation can be enforced in contravention of any treaty or other international agreement of this nation.

Party Stands

The Republican Party platform of 1948 called for "a long-term program in the interest of agriculture and the consumer which should include effective protection of reasonable market prices through flexible support prices, commodity loans, marketing agreements. . ."

The Democrat Party platform of 1948 stated: "Specifically, we favor a permanent system of flexible price supports for agricultural products, to maintain farm income on a parity with farm operating costs. . ."

HOUSE

On Jan. 3, Rep. Brent Spence (D Ky.) introduced H.R. 6567 increasing the borrowing authority of CCC from $4.75 billion to $6.75. The bill was referred to the Banking and Currency Committee of which Spence was chairman.

Hearings

Hearings were held on March 1, 2, 3, and 6, with representatives of American Farm Bureau Federation and the National Grange supporting the CCC increase. Also backing the increase, but criticizing CCC operating methods, were representatives of the American Bankers Association and midwest grain dealer groups.

For the Administration, Secretary of Agriculture Brannan went before the House group to urge the increase as a necessary move to save the declining purchasing power of the farmer.

The committee approved the bill after rejecting an amendment to require the CCC to use private storage facilities for surplus commodities in preference to government-owned storage. This was urged by the private grain trade. The Committee vote on the bill was 17-2 to report it to the House March 10.

Debate

The House began debate on H.R. 6567 March 23 as Rep. John McSweeney (D Ohio), handling the bill for the Rules Committee, told the House, "Prices of farm commodities and other commodities in the last few years have risen. For that reason, an additional $2 billion is needed to carry on more effectively the work of CCC. We hope we may make this a balanced program where the government will get back into the Treasury the amount it has put out as a revolving fund."

Complaints about the operations of CCC and government food surpluses were the chief subjects of debate on the measure. Rep. Albert M. Cole, (R Kan.) offered an amendment specifying that the CCC should use the usual channels of trade for its services.

Resolutions of the Farm Bureau Federation and National Council of Farm Cooperatives were placed in the Record by Cole. These resolutions urged Congress to examine and take action against any disposition on the part of CCC to enter "more and more" into the actual marketing of agricultural commodities.

"The purpose of my amendment," Cole told the House, "is to prevent CCC from supplanting private business. It will require CCC to use the usual and customary channels of trade and commerce, including the employment of dealers and commission merchants for such services as are ordinarily performed for hire in the course of private commercial handling and disposition of the commodities."

Cole's amendment received support from many midwest Republicans but was defeated on a division vote 43-143.

Rep. Walter Judd (R Minn.) attempted to overcome objections to Cole's amendment by weakening it to the extent of specifying that the CCC should use usual channels of trade when it could be done with equal efficiency and no greater expense. His amendment was defeated on a division vote 51-112.

Rep. John Heselton (R Mass.) then attempted to amend the CCC charter and provide for disposition of surplus commodities to public institutions.

Under Heselton's amendment, the surpluses would have been delivered at no cost to various points within the U. S. or at shipside at the port of embarkation. "This is an opportunity to stop wasting $60,000 every day," Heselton said.

Chairman of the House Agriculture Committee Harold Cooley (D N.C.) pointed out that his committee was in the middle of hearings on similar bills for disposal of food surpluses.

The Heselton amendment was defeated 81-116 and an attempt to modify it by Rep. Brooks Hays (D Ark) also failed.

Another attempt to amend the bill by reducing the $2 billion increase to $1 billion was defeated, and a move by Rep. Ralph A. Gamble (R N.Y.) to recommit the bill with instructions to cut the increase in half was defeated by a standing vote of 77-179.

Final Action

On March 24, by voice vote, the House passed the bill in the same form in which it had been reported from Committee.

AMENDMENTS REJECTED

Albert M. Cole (R Kan.) — Specify that the CCC shall use usual channels of trade for its services. Division (standing) vote 43-143.

John Phillips (R Calif.) — Modify Cole amendment to exempt transactions in sending surplus commodities to school lunch programs. Division 65-84.

Kenneth B. Keating (R N.Y.)—Reduce increase by $1 billion. Division 55-102.

Walter H. Judd (R Minn.) — Specify that the CCC shall use usual channels of trade for its services when it can be done with equal efficiency and no greater expense. Division 51-112.

John W. Heselton (R Mass.)—Provide for disposition of surplus commodities to public institutions. Division 81-116.

Brooks Hays (D Ark.) — Modify Heselton amendment to specify that the CCC shall not pay transportation charges for surplus commodities if it would decrease the total food for the institution. Voice.

Morgan M. Moulder (D Mo.)—Require CCC to "exercise due diligence" to render efficient service. Voice.

SENATE

On Jan. 10, Sen. Elmer Thomas (D Okla.) introduced S 2826, a companion bill to H. R. 6567, authorizing an increase in CCC borrowing authority of $2 billion. The bill was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry of which Thomas was chairman.

Hearings

The Senate Committee launched its hearing in January but became sidetracked by charges of shortages in CCC books and demands by the private grain trade for amendments requiring the CCC to do business with private grain facilities in handling commodities purchased by the government.

As a result of the wrangling, three different sets of hearings were held by the Senate Committee, in January, February, and March.

In January, Secretary Brannan appeared at opening hearings on S 2826 and told Senators that farm prices had dropped 23 per cent below the January 1948 peak. By contrast,

"prices paid by farmers have gone down less than 4 per cent" since the peak was reached in September 1948. Farm prices must be strengthened, he said, or the purchasing power of farm families would drop still further in 1950.

Following his testimony, Brannan found that one of his sharpest critics was former Secretary of Agriculture, Sen. Clinton P. Anderson (D N.M.), who joined with Sen. Williams, a long-time critic of CCC, in requesting a delay of committee action on the bill until an official audit of the agency had been completed. By voice vote, the committee agreed to the request, and ordered representatives of the Comptroller General and the Agriculture Secretary to appear as soon as possible to testify on operations of CCC.

Although Anderson agreed with Williams that audits should be available, he expressed doubt they would show anything to make the requested increase in CCC borrowing authority inadvisable.

Auditors Testify

Hearings were resumed Feb. 14 and auditors from the Government's General Accounting Office testified that Sen. Williams' charges of a $366 million shortage in 1945 were "untrue"

GAO auditors said Williams had "misunderstood terms"; that the $366 million was not lost, but that the involved handling of products and food during wartime had made it difficult to determine where the $366 million should be charged off. The money was not "lost", auditors testified; they were just "unable to verify the spending of it".

CCC went under additional fire during these February hearings. Private grainmen claimed they had difficulty doing business with the government agency.

Midwest grainmen asked the committee for more checks on the CCC. Oscar Olson, president of the Farmers' Elevator Association of Minnesota, said the CCC by-passes normal trade channels, contrary to law. This, he said, tends to "socialize" grain.

Leo C. Lester, Southern Minnesota Managers' Association and Western Grainmen, said the CCC was slow in completing its transactions. Shippers, he said, have to wait "for periods in excess of eight months" to be paid for handling CCC shipments.

Walter R. Scott, Kansas City, Mo., Board of Trade, asked for an amendment on the bill providing that the CCC can acquire or finance no more permanent grain storage facilities. He said that private elevator interests were suffering from the CCC building program.

Complaints of the private grain trade that CCC had not used the services of cash commission men in handling and storing grain acquired by the government under price support loans to farmers were taken up on Feb. 17 by Frank J. Wooley, vice-president of CCC.

If the government had acceded to the demands of the private grain trade the previous year, Wooley said, it would have cost CCC $14 million more because of the higher fees charged by cash commission men.

William F. Brooks, executive secretary of the National Grain Council, called Wooley's estimate "rather unfair". He said the cash commission men never expected the government to pay their regular 1 1/2 cent a bushel rate. Wooley replied that no lower offer was made to CCC.

Wooley also expressed the CCC's opposition to having its charter amended to restrict its powers to buy or acquire storage space for crops under loan, or to require it to utilize private trade facilities.

Bill Reported

On March 8, the bill, with two amendments, was reported to the Senate.

One of the amendments was that of Sen. Warren G. Magnuson (D Wash.) and Sen. Wayne Morse (R Ore.) which prohibited the import under reciprocal trade agreements of commodities which would compete with domestic price supported crops.

The Magnuson-Morse rider, an amendment to the Agricultural Adjustment Act of 1933, was to require the Secretary of Agriculture to conduct an investigation whenever he believed imports of food commodities would threaten domestic farm programs. Results of the investigation would be reported to the President, who would impose fees and limitations on the import of such commodities as he deemed necessary.

Sen. Thomas said the Magnuson rider would apply only to future trade agreements or renegotiation of present ones.

The second amendment accepted by the Committee was submitted by Sen. Edward J. Thye (R Minn.). The amendment provided that the CCC "shall employ the services of dealers, commission merchants, and the other usual and customary channels, facilities, and arrangements of trade and commerce" in handling agricultural commodities.

Bill Recommitted

After S 2826 had been reported with the Magnuson-Morse rider and the Thye amendment, the Agriculture Department strenuously opposed the latter feature.

The emphatic disapproval of the Department prompted the Senate on March 13 to recommit the bill to the Agriculture Committee, so that Secretary Brannan could appear to express his views on it.

On March 15, Secretary Brannan went before the Committee and said the Thye amendment would force the CCC to use private trade facilities for all its transactions.

This, he said, would "put us over the barrel" at the prices the private grain middlemen chose to ask. At that time, Brannan said, the CCC used some of its own facilities to help the farmer get better prices, but also used private facilities when it was possible to do so.

Thye said his amendment followed an avalanche of protests on CCC transactions. Elevator operators, he said, claimed that CCC payments were slow. "I am positive its language could not be construed to mean that the Commodity Credit Corporation could not own and possess storage facilities," Thye said.

House Bill Reported In Lieu

But on March 24 the Senate Committee received HR 6567 which had passed the House without the controversial amendment, and on March 30 reported it to the Senate minus the Thye amendment, but still incorporating the Magnuson amendment on imports.

Debate

On June 5, the Senate began two days of debate on the measure. Handling the debate for the Democrats, Sen. Allen J. Ellender (D La.) outlined three reasons the increased funds should be made available to the CCC.

Crop production for 1950 was uncertain, he said, and Congress had already committed itself to certain price supports. Thirdly, the CCC needed a "reserve" to give the farmers confidence in the program.

During much of the debate, Sen. Williams held the floor to restate his charges of funds shortages in the CCC.

Williams offered an amendment to cancel the fund increase and stop present 90-per-cent-of-parity price support of basic commodities. Flexible price support would be substituted for all supported crops. Williams told the Senate:

"The wholesale waste and destruction of food which inevitably accompanies (the present) unsound program is becoming obnoxious to the American people, and unless the Senators representing the farm states recognize this situation and agree to have the support price on these commodities lowered to a more realistic level, they will soon find themselves with no farm program whatever."

Two Williams Proposals Rejected

The amendment was rejected 18-50 on roll-call vote, however. Williams then offered an amendment cutting the fund boost by $1 billion. That was rejected 21-36 on roll call.

George D. Aiken (R Vt.) sponsored an amendment which would have revamped the bookkeeping system of the CCC, but it failed 23-29. Williams then charged that the CCC had "written off" a $96-billion shortage during the war. He said the money could never be traced. Spessard L. Holland (D Fla.) said the missing money was only one per cent of the money spent by the CCC during the "hurly-burly war years" and that the CCC should not be penalized now for the error.

Williams again reviewed the history of the missing funds at length and then moved that the bill be recommitted to the Agriculture Committee with instructions to study the Aiken amendment to alter CCC bookkeeping and also to obtain an audit of CCC operations in 1948 and 1949.

The recommittal motion was defeated 21-30.

Final Action

Passage of the bill came an hour after midnight on June 7 after a 13-hour session. A motion to adjourn at midnight had lost on roll call 19-28.

The final vote was 46-5. One Democrat, J. Allen Frear (Del.) opposed the bill with four Republicans, Robert C. Hendrickson (N.J.), Irving Ives (N.Y.), Leverett Saltonstall (Mass.), and John J. Williams (Del.). For the bill were 25 Democrats and 21 Republicans.

AMENDMENTS REJECTED

John J. Williams (R Del.) — Strike out fund increase and remove immediately all rigid 90 per cent price supports. Roll-call vote 18-50.

George D. Aiken (R Vt.) — Give Secretary of Agriculture authority to dispose of perishable surplus commodities to foreign relief organizations and pay part of the cost of transportation. Roll call 20-37.

Williams — Cut fund boost $1 billion: Roll call 21-36.

Aiken — Revamp bookkeeping system of CCC. Roll call 23-29.

CONFERENCE

Because the House and Senate bills differed, they were sent to a conference committee for ironing out of differences on June 7. The major point in dispute was the Senate - approved rider by Sen. Magnuson and Sen. Morse which would restrict foreign farm imports which competed with domestic products under price support programs.

The conferees weakened the Magnuson rider with a compromise proposed by the State Department. The compromise directed the Secretary of Agriculture to report to the President whenever he determined foreign farm imports were threatening domestic farm programs. The President would then call for an investigation by the Tariff Commission with final decisions for action resting with the Chief Executive.

Conferees also accepted a request by the State Department that the amendment stipulate that no proclamation arising from such a situation could be enforced in contravention of any treaty or other international agreement of this nation.

The compromise legislation drawn by the conference committee was submitted to both chambers on June 15.

The House accepted the conference report on CCC on June 21 by a vote of 235-81.

On June 26, the Senate gave final approval to the bill with Vice President Barkley affirmatively breaking a 35-35 tie. In passing the measure, Democrats beat down Republican attempt to send the conference report back with instructions to conferees to restrengthen the "watered down" Magnuson import rider.

LAW ENACTED

President Truman signed the bill increasing the borrowing authority of the CCC on June 28. It became Public Law 579.

LOBBY STANDS

Nearly 100 farm-connected lobby groups took an active interest in the CCC loan authority legislation. The major farm organizations supported the request for $2 additional borrowing authority, but their stands on amendments varied.

The American Farm Bureau Federation wanted the loan increase, and noted a tendency of CCC to edge into the actual marketing of farm products. However, it opposed the Thye amendment, as possibly hampering CCC's workability.

National Farmers Union backed the loan increase, called again for the Brannan plan, and flatly opposed the Thye amendment which it said "means nothing more or less than an outright, unjustified gift of more than $10 million to the private grain trade".

National Grange wanted the larger loan authorization and thought Congress should "give consideration to a proviso more definitely outlining CCC's role in the grain business". The Grange objected to CCC's tendency "to gradually exclude more and more products from being handled by farmer cooperatives and private distributors". It wanted CCC to use private facilities where adequate.

National Council of Farmer Cooperatives approved the larger loan authority and said it was convinced CCC "is steadily invading the field of farm marketing" to an extent jeopardizing American agriculture. It favored Thye's amendment.

National Milk Producers Federation simply testified at length in favor of the larger loaning powers for CCC. It took no stand on the Thye amendment.

Pacific Wool Growers urged support for the Thye amendment to help get CCC "out of private business".

Thye Amendment Backed

In addition, these grain trade groups supported the Thye amendment calling for CCC to channel its grain trade business to regular dealers:

Farmers Elevator Assn. of Minnesota.
Southern Minnesota Managers' Assn.
Federation of Cash Grain Commission Merchants.
Farmer Grain Dealers Assn. of Illinois and Illinois Grain Dealers' Assn. wanted CCC to use regular grain merchandisers to increase efficiency in accounting for shipments.
Cash Grain Commission Merchants' Assn.
National Grain Trade Council, made up of 32 boards of trade, grain exchanges and associations.
Portland Grain Exchange.
Federation of Cash Grain Commission Merchants' Assn.
Missouri - Kansas Businessmen's Assn.
American Cotton Linter Assn.
Grain and Feed Dealers National Assn.
North Dakota Grain Dealers Assn.
Farmers Grain Dealers Assn. of South Dakota.
Western Grain and Feed Assn. of Iowa.
Kansas City Board of Trade.

Spokesmen for Kansas City Board of Trade also represented:

Denver Grain Exchange, Salina (Kan.) Board of Trade, St. Joseph (Mo.) Grain Exchange, Wichita (Kan.) Board of Trade, Hutchinson (Kan.) Board of Trade Assn.

Also, Colorado Grain, Milling and Feed Dealers Assn., Kansas Grain, Feed and Seed Dealers Assn., Oklahoma Grain and Feed Dealers Assn., and Texas Grain and Feed Dealers Assn.

Magnuson-Morse Rider

The groups which supported the Magnuson - Morse "import restriction" amendment were:

National Grange
American Farm Bureau Federation
National Council of Farmer Cooperatives
National Milk Producers Federation
National Renderers Assn.
Western States Meat Packers Assn.
National Independent Meat Packers Assn.
Northwest Horticultural Council
California Fruit Growers Exchange
California Assn. for Walnut Growers
California Almond Growers Exchange
Calavo Growers of California
American Hop Growers Assn.
Northwest Nut Growers
National Cherry Institute
Florida Fruit and Vegetable Assn.
National Apple Institute

One group, the National Farmers Union, came out flatly against the Magnuson amendment and said it "would cripple foreign trade programs."

Acreage Allotments

HJ Res 398—P. L. 471

SUMMARY

Before the second session of the 81st Congress could be called to order, complaints about the 1949 cotton-peanut planting law (P.L. 272, 81st Congress) were showering Southern Congressmen. Objection to the law (See CQ Almanac, Vol V, page 149) came from farmers who said their 1950 acreage limitations would result in serious hardship.

The House Agriculture Committee started work Dec. 14, 1949 on a bill to ease the situation. Result was H. J. Res. 398, which increased total acreage for cotton and peanuts and adjusted the individual quota formula. Despite delaying tactics on the part of Northern and Eastern Congressmen, the bill passed the House without amendment.

The Senate Agriculture Committee removed the peanut clauses, tightened up somewhat on cotton planting, and added a ban on potato price support unless strict controls could be enacted. The Senate itself postponed a potato crackdown until 1951, added sections easing restrictions on peanuts and wheat, and accepted committee provisions on cotton.

The House then accepted a conference compromise that split the difference on cotton provisions and accepted most Senate views regarding potatoes and peanuts. But the Senate objected to added aid to cotton farmers and returned the bill to conference. The second compromise was accepted by both houses and the bill was sent to the President.

Provisions

The Agricultural Adjustment Act of 1938 was amended by adding the following provisions:

Unused individual cotton acreage allotments may be redistributed among other farms.

Allotments shall be set to equal 65 per cent of the average acreage planted to cotton in 1946, 1947, and 1948 or else at 45 per cent of the highest acreage planted in any one of the three years, the cotton acreage not to exceed 40 per cent of the entire tilled acreage on the farm.

Government-owned surplus potatoes may be disposed of as the Secretary of Agriculture sees fit to school-lunch programs, the Bureau of Indian Affairs, federal, state or local public welfare organizations, private or international non-profit welfare organizations, penal institutions and non-profit hospitals. Government-paid transportation on potatoes going to private or international organizations shall be limited to movement to the nearest port.

No price supports shall be set on Irish potatoes of the 1950 crop when producers disapprove marketing agreements.

Low-grade potatoes shall not be supported.

The 1951 potato crop shall not be supported unless strict marketing quotas are in effect.

"Two-price" system for peanuts restored. (Provided production does not exceed 1947 production, peanuts in excess of 1950 quotas may be produced. The excess peanuts must be sold to the government at the same price the government can get for them less handling costs.)

In 1950, the peanut acreage allotment for any state shall not be reduced by a percentage larger than the percentage by which the 1950 national allotment has been reduced.

BACKGROUND

In anticipation of surplus cotton and peanut crops in 1950, Congress approved a law (P. L. 272) in August 1949 setting acreage restrictions on those crops for the first time in eight years. As soon as the Agriculture Department announced the quotas, complaints from farmers began to pour in on legislators. Congress was asked to change the law before the crops were planted in March and April of 1950.

HOUSE

Committee

The House Agriculture Committee reported that it found hardships to exist and blamed them on the following factors:

Cotton marketing quotas and acreage allocations will be in effect in 1950 for the first time since 1942. In the period between 1942 and 1949 tremendous shifts occurred in the pattern of cotton production in the U. S. generally. The shift was westward—by 1949 more than two thirds of all cotton produced in the U. S. came from west of the Mississippi.

Many of the state and county PMA (Production and Marketing Administration) committeemen have had no experience with the allocation of cotton quotas, because they were not working before 1942.

Reliable information on cotton production during the 7-year interval was completely lacking—in the opinion of the Committee the major contributing factor to the inequities which resulted.

State and county committees, according to the report, failed to set aside and to use in the best possible manner the reserves authorized by law—10 per cent of the state and 15 per cent of each county allotment—to make adjustments in county allotments for trends in acreage, for counties adversely affected by abnormal conditions, or for small or new farms.

The Committee brought out Jan. 21, a one-year interim bill, H J Res 398, which provided:

Any farmer who applies in writing for an adjustment of his 1950 cotton acreage allotment, shall be entitled to an acreage which will not be less than the larger of (a) 70 per cent of his average cotton acreage during 1946-48, or (b) 50 per cent of the highest acreage in any one of those three years (counting credit for war crops in each case), but no adjustment shall bring his total allotment above 40 per cent of the acreage tilled annually or in regular rotation on the farm.

County committees may accept surrendered acreage from farmers whose allotment exceeds their planned acreage to effect the above adjustments. Estimates placed the additional total cotton acreage required by this bill at 1,400,000 acres.

The bill contained a separate section for peanuts which provided that the peanut acreage for no state shall be reduced by a percentage greater than the ratio of the total 1950 acreage to the 1949 national peanut acreage. This section would have added about 100,000 acres to the total national peanut acreage.

A section on wheat acreage was considered but rejected when Chairman Harold D. Cooley (D N.C.) said he would name a special subcommittee to study the wheat problem.

The bill ultimately approved was formally introduced by Cooley Jan. 17 and was reported favorably Jan. 21

Debate

The House extended to three days the three-hours debate allotted to the cotton and peanut acreage bill (H J Res 398), and finally Jan. 31 passed the measure as reported from Committee. Final action came by voice vote after rejection by roll call, 136-240, of a recommittal motion by August H. Andresen (R Minn.). (Vote p. 101.)

Debate opened with frequent references by Congressmen from the North and East to two recent actions by Southern Democrats: Passage of the oleo bill and defeat of the attempt to bring up the FEPC bill. During the first day's debate, Jan. 27, various representatives, led by John Lesinski (D Mich.) requested five quorum calls (each using up more than 1/2 hour). When Eugene J. McCarthy (D Minn.) asked for the sixth, Chairman Harold Cooley (D N.C.) of the Agriculture Committee called it quits for the day.

Reid F. Murray (R Wis.) who had been active in opposing the oleo bill exclaimed that the Southerners and the Administration had put dairy farmers out of business faster than they could put them in, by supporting the oleo measure.

W. R. Poage, (D Tex.), one of the chief spokesmen for the bill, said it was not designed for the benefit of the cotton farmer or the peanut grower, but that "acreage allotments and marketing quotas are primarily for the benefit of the American taxpayer. . .They are imposed so that there may be a reasonable limitation upon the obligation of the government under the support program which is so essential to our entire economic welfare."

Lindley Beckworth (D Tex.) said that he had warned in August, when the original acreage restriction bill was debated, that it would not work equitably. Clarence J. Brown (R Ohio) blamed the situation on "the so - called trial run of the 1949 Agricultural Act". John E. Lyle (D Tex.) blamed maladministration by the Agriculture Department. He asked "give the farmer a fair deal".

AMENDMENTS REJECTED

Cecil F. White (D Calif.) — Eliminate 40 per cent crop land provisions. Division, 21-56.

Victor Wickersham (D Okla.) — Change base years to 1941-1943. Voice.

Poage — Delete alternative maximum of 50 per cent of highest of three years. Division, 22-28.

White — Raise crop-land percentage to 50 per cent. Voice.

William M. Whittington (D Miss.)— Lower permissable maximum acreage allotment from 70 to 60 per cent of 1946-48 average. Voice.

Jamie L. Whitten (D Miss.) — Establish allotments for non-owner cotton-planters whose acreage had become unavailable. Division, 3-38.

Ken Regan (D Tex.) — Establish 30 per cent quota for cotton farm planted for first time in 1949. Voice.

Beckworth — Exempt from penalty provision growers of less than 5 acres of cotton. Point of order — not germane.

Beckworth — Exempt from penalty provision, veterans of World War II who grow less than 5 acres. Point of order.

Robert L. F. Sikes (D Fla.) — Dispose of and establish credit for voluntarily surrendered peanut acreage. Voice.

SENATE

The Senate Agriculture Committee received the bill Feb. 1. It already was studying a similar measure (S 2919) introduced by James O. Eastland (D Miss.), John C. Stennis (D Miss.), Lister Hill (D Ala.), John L. McClellan (D Ark.), Olin D. Johnston (D S.C.) and John C. Sparkman (D Ala.). The Eastland cotton bill was called less liberal than the House version, boosting individual allotments to 60 per cent of the farmer's three-year average planting or 40 per cent of the farm's acreage. According to Department of Agriculture estimates, the House bill would have meant 1,400,000 additional acres of cotton: while the Eastland bill would add 800,000 acres.

The House bill was attacked by the American Farm Bureau and by Sen. Clinton Anderson (D N. M.), former Secretary of Agriculture, as being "too liberal". They preferred the Eastland bill. So the House wording was rejected and the Eastland provisions substituted. The House number was retained.

Potato Problems

At that same time the Agriculture Committee was plagued with potato problems. The trouble was caused by the potato surplus. In Maine the government was struggling to dispose of millions of bushels of surplus potatoes acquired through price-prop purchases. There were few takers at any price, and the Secretary of Agriculture said he might have to plow them under. At the same time, the high potato price maintained by government purchasing program was attracting Canadian potatoes — some legally, even though an import duty had to be paid — and some illegally, smuggled over the border to be sold to the government as Maine-grown potatoes.

Farm-state Congressmen saw the potato flood as a threat to the entire price support program. Senate Majority Leader Scott W. Lucas (D Ill.) said the losses to the government through potato purchase could lead to public indignation and a "complete breakdown" of price supports.

Sens. Owen Brewster (R Maine) and Elmer Thomas (D Okla.), chairman of the Senate Agriculture Committee, both proposed modified "Brannan Plans" as a solution. Brewster suggested use of an unused provision in the present support law. Licensed dealers acting for the government could buy potatoes at legal support prices. The dealer then could sell the potatoes at their true value. The government would reimburse the dealer for the difference between purchase and sale price. This would be similar to the Brannan Plan, under which commodities would seek their own price level, but the government would make up the producer's loss during low-price periods.

Thomas' proposed plan would allow potato prices to consumers to fall to a normal level, but would require the government to reimburse the farmer at 75 per cent of parity. He said his plan differs from Brannan "production payments" in that 75 instead of 100 per cent of parity would be mandatory. Thomas said 100 per cent payments would not be possible without effective production and marketing controls.

Another drastic solution was offered by Lucas as a rider to a cotton acreage bill. Lucas urged that all price supports be withdrawn from Irish potatoes planted after the bill became law unless strict marketing quotas were in effect. He told the Committee: "The time has come for Congress to act. We cannot, under any circumstances, continue to subsidize those potato growers who, through the use of better fertilizer, the planting of rows closer together and the more extensive use of irrigation, are taking advantage of the pocketbook of Uncle Sam."

The committee accepted the Lucas rider unanimously. The bill was reported favorably Feb. 16.

Debate

Debate on the measure was interrupted several times, but got under way finally on Feb. 23. Most discussion centered on potatoes. In addition to the Lucas rider there were several proposals on the potato problem before the Senate. They were:

John J. Williams (R Del.) — Remove props from potatoes harvested after enactment of the bill until strict marketing quotas could be put into effect.

A. Willis Robertson (D Va.) — Remove props from potatoes planted after March 15 until strict marketing quotas could be put into effect.

George D. Aiken (R Vt.) — Remove props from potatoes harvested after enactment of the bill except in cases where marketing agreements are in effect. (The agreements, provided for in the Agricultural Marketing Agreement Act of 1937, were milder than quotas would have been, and were then in effect in most surplus areas.)

Kenneth S. Wherry (R Neb.) — Stop potato imports while a surplus exists.

Williams and Irving Ives (R N. Y.) — Put sliding scale price supports into effect immediately.

Debate centered on the Lucas and Aiken plans. Aiken said the Lucas rider would repudiate an implied promise to potato growers. Lucas replied that the present potato price support "scandal" would "ultimately destroy the foundations of our successful Agricultural Adjustment Act."

The proposals basing cutoff dates on potato planting were criticized as being unenforceable. Senators said it would be impossible to check on planting dates; they said harvesting dates could easily be determined. The Williams proposal was then substituted for the Lucas rider.

The Williams plan was replaced by the Aiken proposal on a roll-call vote of 43-35. Eight Republicans and 27 Democrats opposed the Aiken amendment; 28 Republicans and 15 Democrats favored it. The split was generally on sectional lines.

The Wherry, Robertson and Williams-Ives amendments were then rejected. Williams and Ives altered their amendment to put sliding scales into effect Jan. 1, 1951, but it, too, was rejected. Potatoes are now supported at 90 per cent of parity, with sliding scales to go into effect gradually over 1951 and 1952.

After the Aiken modification of this year's crop supports was adopted, the Senate took up restrictions on future crops. An amendment by Allen J. Ellender (D La.) was adopted to establish strict quotas on the 1951 potato crop.

Amendments were approved easing acreage restrictions on wheat and peanuts. The original cotton acreage proposals reported from Committee were agreed to.

AMENDMENTS AGREED TO

John J. Williams (R Del.) — Amend Lucas rider to make it apply to all potatoes harvested after enactment of the bill. Roll call 47-31.

Pat McCarran (D Nev.) — Provide that any state with a cotton allotment of less than 3,000 acres be allowed to add 2,000 acres to its allotment (Nevada had been allotted 110 acres). Voice.

George D. Aiken (R Vt.) — Substitute for Lucas rider a provision that no price support shall be available for potatoes harvested after enactment of the bill unless marketing agreements authorized by Agricultural Marketing Agreement Act of 1937 are in effect. Roll call 43-35.

Allen J. Ellender (D La.) — Stipulate that, following the 1950 potato crop year, no price support shall be available unless marketing quotas are in effect. Roll call 64-14.

Walter F. George (D Ga.) — Ease restrictions on peanut acreage. Roll call 49-28.

Edwin C. Johnson (D Colo.) and Eugene D. Millikin (R Colo.) — Add to new wheat acreage in West and Rocky Mountain states. Roll call 49-24.

Elmer Thomas (D Okla.) — Instruct CCC to attempt to sell surplus potatoes for cost before they are destroyed or given away. Roll call 71-6.

AMENDMENTS REJECTED

A. Willis Robertson (D Va.) — Substitute, for Lucas rider, provisions that no price support shall be available for potatoes planted after March 15 unless marketing agreements are in effect. Voice.

Kenneth S. Wherry (R Neb.) — Stop potato imports while a surplus exists. Roll call 31-46.

Williams, Irving Ives (R N. Y.), Leverett Saltonstall (R Mass.), and Robert C. Hendrickson (R N. J.) — Put sliding scale price supports in effect immediately. Roll call 17-59.

Williams, Ives, Saltonstall, Hendrickson — Put sliding price supports in effect Jan. 1, 1951. Roll call 20-55.

CONFERENCE

The Senate and House versions were sent to conference where the following Congressmen worked over differences: Reps. Harold D. Cooley (D N. C.), Stephen Pace (D Ga.), W. R. Poage (D Tex.), George M. Grant (D Ala.) and Clifford R. Hope (R Kan.) and Sens. Elmer Thomas (D Okla.), Allen J. Ellender (D La.), Clyde R. Hoey (D N. C.) and Edward J. Thye (R Minn.).

They came up with a compromise March 15 and recommended that the cotton acreage boost be set at 65 per cent of the acreage planted to cotton in 1946-48 or 45 per cent of the cotton acreage planted during any one of the three years.

Other provisions accepted, none of which were in the original House bill were:

1. Remove potato price supports for next year unless rigid controls are agreed to. This was in the Senate bill.

2. Withhold price supports this year from low-grade potatoes. This was in neither bill.

3. Add 100,000 acres to price-supported peanut allotment. This was similar to the Senate provision.

4. Pay transportation of potatoes to be given free to charitable institutions, etc. In Senate bill.

Provisions removed from the Senate version would have increased wheat acreage in the West and would have increased cotton acreage in minor cotton states by 2000 acres.

The conference added another provision which had appeared in neither of the original bills. It added 50,000 cotton acres for farmers whose 1950 crops had been destroyed by the "green bug". Most green bug destruction was in Oklahoma.

The House approved the compromise bill March 16 on division vote 150-66 Several city Congressmen objected to the bill. They said that consumers were protesting the high cost of food and price supports and predicted that the new acreage bill would aggravate the situation.

The Senate took up the conference report March 21, but on a point of order by Clinton P. Anderson (D N. M.), the whole problem was put back in the hands of the House-Senate conference. Anderson objected to the green bug provision.

Vice President Barkley ruled that the green bug provision was not a "compromise", but a totally new section. He upheld the point of order and the bill was returned to conference.

In one short session the conferees deleted the green bug clause, reduced peanut planting for oil and dropped a House provision allowing the Secretary of Agriculture to withhold support from low-grade potatoes. The House passed the new compromise bill March 23 on roll call 196-157 (vote p. 100). Most opposition came from northern Representatives who said the measure favored southern farmers.

The Senate acted later in the day, approving the bill 37-33 on roll call (vote p. 99). Then supporters of the bill started a routine parliamentary maneuver to clinch the vote. To do this, supporters move to reconsider the vote and then move to lay that motion on the table.

But this time the plan backfired. First, it was moved to reconsider the vote. Then a motion to table reconsideration was made. The tabling motion failed on roll call 35-37. The Senate then recessed before final vote on the motion to reconsider could be taken.

A vote was taken March 21 on the motion to reconsider and it was rejected 31-38 on roll call (vote p. 99). There was no debate.

LAW ENACTED

The President signed the cotton-potato-peanut bill March 31, but sent a message to Congress criticizing portions of the measure and asking enactment of the Brannan Plan. The bill, he said, gives only "temporary" relief from farm problems. "It does not remedy the basic defect in the present system of determining cotton acreage allotments," he said. Regarding the peanut provisions, he added, "But domestic 'two-price' system for peanuts thus established is subject to serious objections."

"The relief which it will give cotton producers and the promise which it holds out for making some improvement in the potato program outweigh the defects of the measure," Truman said.

He asked for provisions of the Brannan Plan, saying: "I again urge the Congress to authorize a system of production payments for potatoes (and other perishable commodities) so that unavoidable surpluses can be sold to consumers and used, instead of taken off the market and largely wasted."

Rice Acreage Allotments

SUMMARY

HR 7700 was enacted by Congress in the spring of 1950 because of inequities that arose from the acreage allotments authorized by the Agriculture Department for rice growers for 1950. The inequities chiefly affected growers who had not planted rice in any of the five years prior to 1950, or who had planted in only one or two of those years.

The purpose of HR 7700 was to amend the Agricultural Adjustment Act of 1938, under which the Department of Agriculture had apportioned the national rice acreage allotment among the various rice - producing states.

The measure, originally introduced in the House by Rep. William M. Whittington (D Miss.) March 14, 1950, was passed by the lower chamber by voice vote May 1, and by the Senate by voice vote June 8. It was signed by the President and became Public Law 561 on June 16, 1950.

Under the terms of P. L. 561:

1. The Secretary of Agriculture is authorized to set aside during 1950 one half of one per cent — about 7,965 acres — of the total national acreage allotment for a reserve acreage. The Secretary is authorized to apportion this reserve among farms receiving inadequate allotments under the national distribution because the acreage allotments to their state or county were insufficient. Farmers who did not grow rice in any of the five years preceding 1950 would receive allotments too.

2. After 1950, the Secretary is authorized to set aside each year a reserve acreage of one per cent of the national acreage allotment for special apportionment purpose. These reserve acreages, however, must be subtracted from the national allotment figures.

3. The Agricultural Adjustment Act of 1938 is amended so that new farms may receive more than three per cent of the acreage allotments permitted for the state in which they are located. Under the terms of the AAA, three per cent was the maximum allowed for new farms.

4. The Secretary of Agriculture is directed not to apportion any of the national acreage allotment among farms outside the continental United States (Hawaii and Puerto Rico), or among domestic farms on which the acreage planted to non-irrigated rice is less than three acres.

HOUSE

The House Agriculture Committee approved HR 7700 on April 24, and brought in a report on the rice acreage allotment problem, going into great detail about the need for amending the 1938 Agricultural Adjustment Act. The chief points made by the report were these:

1. Under the AAA, the Department of Agriculture was required to adhere strictly to the rule that acreage allotments be distributed among the states in proportion to the average number of acres they planted to rice in the five-year period immediately preceding the calendar year for which the allotments were made.

2. Because of the operation of this provision, the allotments authorized for some states were, proportionately, far below those authorized for other states.

3. The effect of this situation was that a state such as Mississippi, which had only begun commercial rice production in 1949, was cut 35 per cent in the acreage it was permitted to plant to rice in 1950. The average reduction for other rice - producing states was only 13.7 per cent.

4. 1950 was the first year since 1943 that the Department of Agriculture had invoked the acreage allotment provisions of the Agricultural Adjustment Act with respect to rice. In the seven previous years, rice growers had been able to market almost all they produced and thus there had been only negligible surpluses.

The House by voice vote adopted HR 7700 on May 1.

SENATE

The Senate Agriculture and Forestry Committee favorably reported the rice acreage allotment measure May 18. The bill was passed by the upper chamber by voice vote June 8, after Sen. Allen J. Ellender (D La.) gave a brief explanation of its provisions to satisfy the queries of Sen. Robert C. Hendrickson (R N.J.) The Senate bill contained the same provisions as those approved by the House.

Oleomargarine Tax Repeal

SUMMARY

A bill repealing special federal excise taxes on the sale of oleomargarine was approved by the Senate early in the session. The House had passed the repealer during the first session (CQ Almanac Vol. V. p. 154). Strong opposition was mustered by dairy-state Senators, but the Administration bill was pushed through without important change.

The bill became effective July 1, 1950. It removed the following federal excise taxes:

One-fourth cent a pound on uncolored margarine; 10 cents a pound on colored margarine; $600 a year on manufacturers of oleo; $480 a year on wholesalers of colored margarine; $200 a year on wholesalers of uncolored oleo; $48 a year on retailers of colored margarine; $6 a year on retailers of uncolored margarine.

Other provisions:

1. Oleo must be packaged in one-pound or smaller portions with the word "oleomargarine" or "margarine" on the package in a size not smaller than any other lettering on the label. Package must have a full statement of all ingredients. Each individually-wrapped part in the package must also be labeled.

2. A public eating place serving oleo must post notice of the fact. Individual servings must be labeled, or must be triangular in shape.

3. Margarine and butter must meet the same standards of purity.

4. Penalty for violation of the bill's provisions increased from $5,000 fine to $5,000 fine for each day in violation after a cease-and-desist order has been issued.

5. The act does not contravene state bans on colored margarine.

Votes

(House votes p. 100; Senate votes p. 97)

Most significant Senate vote came on the Wiley-Gillette substitute. The substitute contained two attractive proposals — restriction of yellow oleo sale to intra-state commerce and a repeal of certain wartime excise taxes. The 26 Senators who introduced the substitute could garner only 11 more votes, however, and the substitute was rejected 37-48.

The Senate then went on to reject a series of tax and civil rights riders. After Majority Leader Scott Lucas (D Ill.) promised that these matters would be subsequently brought up one at a time, they all were rejected by easy margins.

Only House vote during the session was on the conference report — approving it 263-106 on roll call. The Senate approved the report 59-20.

BACKGROUND

Margarine has been regulated by federal taxes since 1886, and has been a Congressional issue since before 1880. Taxes were set up in the 1886 law, and amendments added in 1902 and 1931.

Strong dairy farmer sympathy in the House Agriculture Committee kept repeal moves from getting far. Not until 1943 did oleo reach the hearing stage, but after long sessions the House Committee tabled the bill which would have ended margarine taxes and fees.

After the war a combination of high butter prices and increased soybean and cottonseed production, and high consumer price made sentiment more favorable for oleo tax repeal.

The 80th Congress failed to repeal the tax, despite determined efforts of proponents. In the House, a bill by Rep. L. Mendel Rivers (D. S.C.) proposing a margarine tax repeal was pried out of the Agriculture Committee by a discharge petition after the Committee had voted against reporting the measure. The bill passed the House, 260-106. (CQ Almanac Vol. IV, pp. 59, 60).

No Final Vote In '48

Sen. J. William Fulbright's (D Ark.) efforts to get the bill on the calendar for immediate consideration were defeated. When it was assigned to the Senate Agriculture Committee, backers of the bill, on a motion by Fulbright, succeeded in getting the measure transferred to the Senate Finance Committee. Proponents of oleo tax repeal said the bill would certainly have died in the Agriculture Committee. Senate Finance Committee reported the bill with an amendment requiring public eating places serving oleo to label it as such. Congress adjourned before it came to a vote.

In 1949 tax aspects of oleo tax repeal disappeared completely. No one accepted the House Agriculture Committee's invitation to testify for retaining the federal tax on margarine.

But plenty of discussion was heard in both House and Senate committees on the remaining big question: Should yellow margarine be sold in interstate commerce? Dairy-state Congressmen were willing to remove the tax, but they wanted to ban the shipment of yellow oleo across state lines. That would have left manufacture and sale of yellow oleo up to state regulation — and many states had outlawed yellow oleo completely.

Forty-seven oleo bills were considered by the House Agriculture Committee in 1949. The committee finally reported HR 2023, sponsored by Walter K. Granger (D Utah) and August H. Andresen (R Minn.). The bill banned yellow oleo from interstate commerce, while removing the taxes (CQ Almanac Vol. V, p. 155-158).

House Passed in 1949

On the House floor a substitute bill offered by W. R. Poage (D Tex.) was adopted. The bill removed the tax, permitted between-state transport of colored margarine and required proper notification in a public eating place that oleo was being served. The substitute was finally approved 288-89.

The bill then went to the Senate Finance Committee, where the same arguments were heard. The bill was reported, however, with only minor changes.

The Senate then passed over the bill several times. Toward the end of the session, Administration leaders in the Senate promised that oleo tax repeal would be the first item on the 1950 agenda.

Party Stands

Republicans: No mention of margarine tax repeal in platform for 1948.

Democrats: In 1948 platform advocated "repeal of discriminatory tax on the manufacture and sale of oleomargarine". Position of the Administration regarding bills repealing oleo tax, but prohibiting commerce in yellow margarine, was made clear in a letter to the House Agriculture Committee chairman from the office of Federal Security Agency Administrator. The letter said "these prohibitions are not in accord with the program of the President".

The oleo tax repeal bill was called up for debate Jan. 4—the day after the second session of the 81st Congress had been officially convened.

J. William Fulbright (D Ark.), floor manager for the bill, opened debate. He based his appeal for passage on two points: 1. Tax repeal would do no harm to the butter industry; and 2. Repeal would free the oleo industry from discriminatory taxation.

Wiley and Gillette then introduced their substitute amendment, also sponsored by Hugh Butler (R Neb.), Edward J. Thye (R Minn.), Garrett L. Withers (D Ky.), Warren G. Magnuson (D Wash.), Bourke B. Hickenlooper (R Iowa), Glen Taylor (D Idaho), William Langer (R N.D.), Milton R. Young (R N.D.), Wayne Morse (R Ore.), Chan Gurney (R S.D.), Karl E. Mundt (R S.D.), George D. Aiken (R Vt.), Zales N. Ecton (R Mont.), William Jenner (R Ind.), Harry P. Cain (R Wash.), Joseph McCarthy (R Wis.), Homer E. Capehart (R Ind.), Edwin C. Johnson (D Colo.), Guy Cordon (R Ore.), Hubert H. Humphrey (D Minn.), Forrest C. Donnell (R Mo.), Ralph Flanders (R Vt.) and Homer Ferguson (R Mich.).

Substitute Proposal

Their amendment would have repealed the tax, but would have restricted yellow oleo to intra-state commerce. Substitute proponents said their amendment would safeguard states' rights by allowing individual states to regulate margarine sale.

Fulbright said the restrictive substitute would "disrupt the entire margarine industry and would sharply raise costs to consumers."

Gillette aimed his appeal directly at Senators he named as states' righters. He said the oleo repealer violates the principles of states' rights just as do FEPC and anti-poll tax bills. Gillette said he had opposed poll tax legislation in the past.

"And when I voted that way," he continued, "my southern friends would come past me, pat me on the shoulder, and say: 'Thank you, you brave, courageous, honorable States' Rights Democrat.' Where are they now?"

To the substitute was added a Hugh Butler (R Neb.) amendment repealing a variety of wartime excise taxes. At the same time William Langer (R N.D.) offered amendments to the original bill enacting anti-poll tax, anti-lynch, and FEPC legislation.

Major Arguments

Hubert H. Humphrey (D Minn.) spoke Jan. 10 on another dairy-state point of attack—"oleo monopoly." He said that "there are 28 oleomargarine companies, but only five of thse produce approximately two thirds of the total amount in the United States." Butter is produced, he said, by "38,930 small-businessmen dairy farmers."

Milton R. Young (R N.D.) criticized what he said were attempts by oleo manufacturers to imitate butter and "defraud" the consumer. Butler told the Senate that free sale of colored oleo would "tend to establish a dangerous precedent for the indiscriminate sale of synthetic foods to the people of America."

Langer held the floor Jan. 11. He charged that Unilever, Ltd., "a giant monopoly" and "international cartel" was attempting to flood this country with oleomargarine to such an extent that butter would no longer be found on the market.

On Jan. 12 the Administration supporters got in a blow when Olin D. Johnston (D S.C.) spoke for the bill. He said that the margarine tax hurt the consumer, but did not benefit farmers or dairymen.

Homer Ferguson (R Mich.) countered that the Wiley-Gillette amendment preserves states' rights and protects the dairy industry from oleo encroachment. Joseph R. McCarthy (R Wis.) said the issue finally had been narrowed down to the "issue of fraud" and "how much protection will be accorded the producer and the consumer." McCarthy's amendment barring oleo ads and labels from representing oleo as being a dairy product was agreed to on voice vote.

Some of the other arguments of the leading debaters were:

J. William Fulbright (D Ark.), author of the bill—"I do not believe that repeal will injure the dairy industry, much less destroy it. There is not even proof that repeal will do any great amount of damage to butter."

George D. Aiken (R Vt.)—"On one side we have a compact group of a half dozen oleo manufacturers enjoying a near monopoly, and closely associated by a common purpose. On the other hand we have several hundred thousand manufacturers of dairy and creamery butter very loosely organized in an endeavor to retain a market for their products, of which they have already lost a considerable part."

Joseph McCarthy (R Wis.)—"I am sure that the dairy farmers of my state feel that if the housewife would prefer to buy oleomargarine, she should be able to buy it, but she ought to know what she is buying when she does so."

Edward J. Thye (R Minn.)—"It is a question of whether a synthetic product, camouflaged to look and smell and taste like butter, processed entirely synthetically, shall take over and destroy the small individual farmer - owned, farmer - controlled, farmer-operated creamery throughout the entire diversified area of the United States."

Hubert H. Humphrey (D Minn.)—"The Gillette-Wiley substitute is an attack upon monopolistic-administered prices and monopolistic production in behalf of the consumer and his welfare."

Milton R. Young (R N.D.)—"Destruction of our dairy industry through legislation such as is now pending before the Senate would in a large measure nullify much of our laudible efforts toward better conservation of our greatest asset of all—our soil fertility."

Hugh Butler (R Neb.)—"I am intensely concerned lest we pass legislation here which would tend to establish a dangerous precedent for the indiscriminate sale of synthetic foods to the people of America."

Olin D. Johnston (D S.C.)—"For many decades the housewives of this nation have been unduly charged for a food product which contains many vital minerals necessary for our well-being."

Karl Mundt (R S. D.) — "We are confronted with just some plain, practical Pendergast politics which believes it can get some votes now by inducing some city people to go along with them, because they are going to give them a little cheaper spread, and they probably are not going to lose many votes among the farmers, because primarily they are dealing with a group of people who have had the good judgment to vote Republican anyway."

Homer Ferguson (R Mich.) — "Dairying . . . must inevitably suffer tremendously if butter is not given minimum protection in its competitive position with oleomargarine. That minimum protection is to prevent fraud and deception of the persons who consume it."

First Big Test

First big test of pro-repeal strength came Jan. 17 when the Wiley-Gillette substitute was put to a vote.

The substitute still carried a rider, introduced by Butler repealing certain wartime excise taxes. A move by Magnuson, a backer of the substitute to remove the rider failed on voice vote. Magnuson and Humphrey, also a supporter of the substitute, said the excise tax repeal had nothing to do with an oleo bill.

The Senate rejected the entire substitute on a 37-48 roll call.

Langer then called up a series of civil rights amendments to the bill. These were opposed by the Administration, however, on the grounds that they were in no way related to oleo tax repeal. Majority Leader Lucas promised that Senators would have a chance early in the session to vote on separate civil rights bills and wartime excise tax repealers.

Lucas also read a telegram criticizing the Langer riders as moves to kill oleo tax repeal — the telegram signed by representatives of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, Americans for Democratic Action, AFL, CIO, American Council of Human Rights, American Veterans Committee, and the B'nai B'rith Antidefamation League.

Langer's anti-lynching amendment was tabled on a 60-20 roll-call vote. His anti-poll tax amendment was tabled on a 59-17 roll call vote. Then Langer switched tactics and moved that an FEPC bill (S 1728) be taken up and oleo tax repeal be laid aside. This move also was tabled on a 59-17 roll-call vote.

Other minor amendments were then disposed of and the bill itself was voted in. Outcome was a 56-16 roll-call defeat for the dairy Senators — with some of the previous Wiley-Gillette substitute backers joining the Administration camp or not voting.

AMENDMENTS AGREED TO

Joseph R. McCarthy (R Wis.) — Bar oleo ads from representing oleo as being a dairy product. (Made part of Wiley-Gillette substitute and also offered as amendment to HR 2023). Voice vote.

J. Allen Frear (D Del.) — Require yellow oleo to be sold in triangular packages. Voice vote.

Hubert H. Humphrey (D Minn.) — Further extend Pure Food and Drug Code control of oleo manufacture. Voice vote.

J. William Fulbright (D Ark.) — Add the word "butter" to Humphrey amendment. Voice vote.

AMENDMENTS REJECTED

Alexander Wiley (R Wis.), Guy Gillette (D Iowa) — Substitute new bill calling for repeal of tax, but barring yellow margarine in interstate commerce. Roll call, 37-48 (vote, p. 97).

Hugh Butler (R Neb.) — Repeal certain wartime excise taxes on jewelry, furs, luggage, amusements, transportation tickets, telephone bills, etc. (Added to Wiley-Gillette substitute.) Rejected with W-G substitute.

Guy Cordon (R Ore.) — Amend Wiley-Gillette substitute to repeal excise tax on transportation of property. Roll call, 33-56 (vote, p. 97).

William Langer (R N.D.)—Make lynching a federal offense. Tabled on roll call, 60-20 (vote p. 97).

Langer—Bar poll taxes in election of federal officials. Tabled on roll call, 59-17 (vote, p. 97).

Butler-McCarthy — Repeal wartime excise taxes on light bulbs, jewelry, furs, communication, transportation, luxury items, etc. Roll call, 32-43 (vote, p. 97).

CONFERENCE

The bill was sent to conference Feb. 2. Conferees worked on a compromise until Feb. 21 when a tentative decision was announced. The bill was reported March 4.

Most of the argument was over the Senate requirement that colored margarine be sold in triangular packages. That amendment was dropped and a requirement for stricter package labeling was substituted. Penalty for non-compliance with the law was increased by the conference.

Both the House and Senate approved the conference bill March 8 over opposition from dairy-state Congressmen. The House acted first, passing the bill 263-106; the Senate followed suit 59-20 with 196 Democrats and 66 Republicans voting "yes" and 25 Democrats and 80 Republicans voting "no". The Senate quickly followed suit 59-20. Thirty-seven Democrats and 22 Republicans favored the repealer; 6 Democrats and 14 Republicans opposed it.

LAW ENACTED

The bill was signed into law by the President March 16.

LOBBY STANDS

The decades-long running battle between butter and oleo lobbies entered a new phase during the 81st Congress when the dairy industry dropped its opposition to removal of the oleo excise but insisted instead on a ban on the sale of yellow oleo.

Here's how Charles W. Holman, secretary of the National Cooperative Milk Producers Federation, explained the shift to the House Agriculture Committee at hearings held at 1949:

For decades dairying has relied upon a federal tax to prevent widespread sale of oleo colored in "imitation of butter", Holman said, but "because of the propaganda issued by the oleo interests, dairy farmers found themselves over the years involved in continual arguments over such use of taxes, obscuring the basic issue—which was our desire to prevent unfair seizure of the butter market by yellow oleo."

Due to this, and court decisions which "broadened" federal control over intrastate commerce, Holman said dairymen switched their tack, advocating removal of taxes and substitution of prohibition of commercial sale of yellow oleo.

The new policy was ratified by his group, in addition to American Butter Institute, National Creameries Assn., Dairy Industry Committee, and "all of the purebred dairy cattlebreeders' associations". The stand is endorsed by "10 million Americans whose jobs or incomes are directly affected by the future of the dairy industry", Holman said.

Addressing the Senate Finance Committee, Holman said his organization still thought taxes were the best means of controlling oleo, but chose its new stand as the "next best method".

Free Food

HR 9313

SUMMARY

Legislation (HR 9313) to make it easier for eligible groups to get free food from the Commodity Credit Corporation was passed by the House in 1950, but the Senate failed to take final action on it.

The measure was drawn to authorize the CCC to repackage surplus commodities such as butter, eggs, and dried milk, and pay the freight to distributing points around the United States. The food would be available at these without charge to various charitable and relief agencies.

In addition, the government would pay the cost of moving the surplus farm commodities to ports for shipment abroad.

The commodities involved were those the CCC had bought up under the terms of its price support programs. Previously these surpluses were also free to eligible relief agencies, but these groups had been required to pay for repackaging the surpluses and transporting them to distribution points.

HOUSE

The measure was introduced on Aug. 2 by Rep. Walter K. Granger (D Utah) and promptly was referred to the House Agriculture Committee. Hearings were sporadically held during March, May and June. Among witnesses urging passage were:

Reps. Homer D. Angell (R Ore.), Ben Guill (R Tex.), John W. Heselton (R Mass.), Kenneth B. Keating (R N.Y.), Thomas J. Lane (D Mass.), Henry D. Larcade (D La.), Hugh D. Scott, Jr. (R Pa.), and Charles E. Bennett (D Fla.).

Many of these Congressmen had introduced bills similar to HR 9313, and directed their remarks principally to their own measures. But they also strongly supported HR 9313, which embodied the gist of their separate proposals.

Other witnesses, generally in support of the principles of HR 9313, were representatives from the Department of Agriculture, the Friends Committee on National Legislation, the American Council of Volunteer Agencies, the National Farmers Union, and the Commodity Credit Corporation.

Some of the extended testimony came from Secretary of Agriculture Charles Brannan, who estimated that about $25 million would be required to accomplish the goal of the bill.

On Aug. 2, the Agriculture Committee favorably reported HR 9313. As approved, the legislation authorized the Secretary of Agriculture to pay for transportation and repacking of government-owned surplus farm goods such as butter, cheese, eggs and dried milk so as to channel more of them into school lunch and relief programs. Payment for transportation to shipside points also would be permitted for surpluses to be used in overseas relief, but no repackaging would be permitted for this purpose.

The Granger bill approved by the Agriculture group was a "clean" version of an earlier bill (HR 8942) Granger introduced to dispose of the excess foods. This earlier measure would have authorized $50 million to pay the costs.

Final Action

The House took up HR 9313 on Aug. 22, and passed it with an amendment by Harold D. Cooley (D N. C.) specifying that the food should not be given away where it would help communism. The Cooley amendment was substituted for one by James C. Davis (D Ga.) stating flatly that the food could not be sent to a Communist-dominated country.

The Cooley amendment was agreed to on an 85-70 teller vote. Passage of the bill itself was on voice vote.

SENATE

The House-passed bill was referred to the Senate Agriculture Committee which, on Sept. 14, received a push toward favorable action on it from President Truman.

In a letter to Chairman Elmer Thomas (D Okla.), Mr. Truman said the free food program "will not be a costly" one. "It is no more expensive to ship dried eggs and milk, for example, than to carry them in storage for months on end."

The Senate Committee favorably reported the bill the following day, but no action was taken on it by the Senate.

Rural Rehabilitation Trust Fund

Congress completed action in 1950 on a bill (S 930) which would return to the states a trust fund held for them by the Agriculture Department since 1935.

During the depression the federal government appropriated money to be administered locally for rural rehabilitation in stricken states. Part of the money was later returned to the federal government to be held in trust. The money — about $50 million in cash and notes — had been unused for several years.

S 930, a bill returning the money to the states, was approved by the Senate in 1949 (CQ Almanac Vol. V p 163). A companion bill (HR 2392) was introduced in the House and reported favorably by the Agriculture Committee in 1949, but it saw no floor action that year.

The House bill came up for debate March 2, 1950. Substitute plans were offered by Edwin Arthur Hall (R N. Y.) and Clifford R. Hope (R Kan.). Hall wanted the money turned over to the Treasury general fund. Hope asked that the money be used for rural home loans to be given to states in the proportion they contributed to the fund. The Hall substitute was rejected 9-88 on division vote; the Hope substitute lost on division 60-80 and on teller vote 63-78.

Harold D. Cooley (D N.C.) supported the committee bill, saying the federal government had taken the money purely as a trust — that it had no legal claim to the fund. The bill, he told the House, "provides for keeping faith with these solemn agreements".

Final approval was on voice vote after bill supporters defeated 50-77 (division vote) a motion to send the measure back to committee. The Senate bill was then amended by substitution of the House bill text, and it went to conference.

The conference committee made its report March 31. The House agreed to the conference bill April 3, the Senate April 19 — both on voice vote. It became Public Law 499 May 3.

Long-Range Cotton Acreage Quotas

HR 9109

SUMMARY

Reacting to widespread complaints, Congress in March, 1950, enacted a measure (H J Res 398) adjusting inequities which farmers said they were suffering in the distribution of cotton and peanut acreage allotments under the terms of the Cotton Marketing Quota Act of 1949. (For details on this Act, see CQ Almanac, Vol. V, page 149.)

However, H J Res 398 was only a temporary measure to ease for the remainder of 1950 the acreage restrictions imposed by the Act. The premise underlying enactment of H J Res 398 was that by the end of 1950, Congress would have worked out permanent, long-range legislation with respect to acreage control modifications. (See page 76.)

Several long-range bills were introduced to do this, but only one — HR 9109 — drew formal action. Moreover, it was a "clean" bill produced by the House Agriculture Committee, which framed it to include salient points of the numerous long - range bills introduced by individual Congressmen. Hearings had been held on these latter bills.

But although HR 9109 was favorably reported by the House Committee on July 15, and passed by the House on July 31 after considerable debate, the Senate failed to act on it. (On Oct. 3, however, Secretary of Agriculture Charles Brannan announced that marketing quotas and acreage allotments on cotton would not be kept in effect during 1951 by his Department. He acknowledged that the 1949 Quota Act was "not satisfactory or realistic." By lifting the quotas and allotments for 1951, Brannan virtually removed the immediate need for enactment of HR 9109, basically designed to ease these.)

Provisions

As passed by the House, HR 9109:

Provided for the Agriculture Secretary's proclamation of national cotton quotas if the total supply of the crop exceeds the normal supply, i.e., estimated domestic consumption together with exports.

Set forth a program for apportionment of the quotas to the states in future years. As before, cotton farmers were to receive their acreage shares from state and county committees headed by Production and Marketing Administration (Agriculture Department) officials, and individual shares, on the same basis as previously provided.

Provided that, under the existing formula written into the Agricultural Adjustment Act of 1949, cotton quotas were to be proclaimed only when supply exceeds estimated consumption and experts by as much as 30 per cent. (This formula resulted in a 1949 national cotton quota for the first time since about 1942.)

Provided that, with a national quota for 1951 then appearing a virtual certainty, acreage allotments to the states would be the same as in 1950. In 1952, allotments would be based on average acreage planted in 1946, 1947, 1948 and 1950, while production in 1953 and thereafter likewise would be on the basis of the freely planted acreage in those years, exclusive of 1949.

Set peanut acreage for 1951 at a maximum of two million acres. For subsequent years, each state's peanut crop could be no bigger than the state's average acreage harvested in the five years, 1945 through 1949.

Extended the Soil Conservation Act, under which farmers receive government payments for practices that conserve soil resources, through 1952. It otherwise would have expired in 1950.

Required state PMA committees to set aside 10 per cent of the acreage allotments for adjustment of inequities. Penalties — involving a forfeit of price-support advantages — would continue to be imposed upon farmers who produce more than their share of the alloted crop.

HOUSE

Committee

Soon after the 81st Congress reconvened in January for its second session, the House Agriculture Committee divided into a number of subcommittees which launched inquiries into the operation of a welter of agricultural programs and statutes. The various groups continued their study in February, March, April and June. Scores of witnesses were heard on dozens of phases of agriculture.

One of the principal topics on which these witnesses' views were solicited by the various Agriculture subcommittees was the operation of H J Res 398 and the basic Cotton Marketing Quota Act of 1949. Most of the witnesses supported widespread contentions that the latter Act was working a hardship on cotton and peanut producers. They stated generally that H J Res 398 — to alleviate these complaints on a temporary basis — should, in effect, be extended permanently.

Several bills to do this were ultimately placed before the various Agriculture subcommittees. One of the long-range measures was drafted by Rep. Stephen Pace (D Ga.), and his particular proposal (HR 8969) drew approval from the full Agriculture Committee on June 28.

However, this measure was not reported as approved. Instead, the Agriculture Committee made additional changes in it, and then introduced it as HR 9109 — a "clean" measure nominally sponsored by the entire Agriculture group itself.

Report

On July 15, the Agriculture Committee formally reported HR 9109 to the House. In an accompanying statement, the Committee majority said their measure was drawn to clear up problems of cotton supplies and cotton demands. The group noted that "probably no single problem in recent years has been more vexing" than the one of developing a program to "distribute the national cotton acreage allotment among the States, counties and farms in a manner which would be equitable to both the old and new cotton-producing areas of the Nation."

The majority report said the group's aim had also been to "remove all doubt or ambiguity" as to the purposes of portions of the existing law that HR 9109 was drawn to amend.

In a statement of minority views, however, Rep. James G. Polk (D Ohio) said he would "strongly oppose the passage of HR 9109." He said he objected to "a bill specifically stating that farmers shall grow only a specified number of acres of a particular crop". He said the bill "would benefit primarily seven Western States" and that the "increased acreage to these States will have the effect of changing the relationship of county allotments in future years to the detriment of (other) counties . . . "

The House took up consideration of HR 9109 on July 31. But before debate began, a significant change was effected in the measure.

As it came to the floor, the bill contained a wheat acreage allotment program for 1951, limiting the amount states' allotments from the national wheat quota could be cut under their 1950 acreage shares. But this provision was eliminated by an amendment offered by Rep. W. R. Poage (D Tex.) on behalf of the Agriculture Committee. Poage said the 1951 national wheat quota would be sufficiently large to prevent what he described as the "unconscionable" cuts some states had anticipated.

Deletion of the wheat section of the bill served also to meet one of Polk's objections to the measure.

Debate then ensued. Chief defenders of the legislation on the floor were Agriculture group Chairman Harold D. Cooley (D N.C.) and Stephen Pace (D Ga.), the Agriculture Committee's ranking majority member. Cooley said he regarded acreage allotments as "necessary . . . temporary expedients" essential to the maintenance of a "profitable agriculture in this great Republic of ours." Pace said the existing law would make it possible to have "no controls whatever on cotton next year." This, he declared, would mean a 19- to 20-million bale production that "might endanger the whole price support program." William M. Whittington (D Miss.) argued there could be "no reasonable price supports unless there is authority for marketing quotas."

Those opposing the bill included Robert F. Rich (R Pa.) who said he was "against all these controls (because) they lead to socialism and totalitarianism." Cecil F. White (D Calif.) wanted to restore to the bill the requirement for national cotton quotas only when supply exceeds domestic and export requirements by 30 per cent. He said this would mean no quota in 1951 and would permit the West to "plant the cotton it needs to support its people." Fred L. Crawford (R Mich.) contended the bill put the people of the country in "a strait jacket" and reduced "the production of goods for humankind."

After a number of amendments had drawn action, final passage of the measure was voted on division, 160 to 85, after the House had refused on a roll-call vote, 120 to 179, to recommit the legislation.

AMENDMENTS ACCEPTED:

J. M. Combs (D Tex.) — Require state committees to withhold one per cent of state's acreage allotment for distribution to farms with no acreage history. Division, 50 to 25.

Carl Albert (D Okla.) — Allow Oklahoma to withhold 15 per cent reserve for adjustment of acreage inequities. Voice.

W. R. Poage (D Tex.) — Eliminate wheat acreage provisions. Voice.

AMENDMENTS REJECTED:

Cecil White (D Calif.) — Eliminate provision designed to produce marketing quotas for next two years. Division, 20 to 71.

George H. Mahon (D Tex.) — Eliminate provision redistributing Texas 1950 acreage allotment on more equitable basis in 1951 than in 1950. Voice.

Lindley Beckworth (D Tex.) — Require allotment of at least five acres to any World War II veteran recognized as cotton farmer who has no acreage history to qualify. Division, 15 to 46.

Beckworth — Permit any recognized cotton farmer to plant at least five acres without being subject to penalties. Voice.

SENATE

Committee

The House-passed HR 9109 was referred to the Senate's Agriculture and Forestry Committee. Almost immediately, three California lawmakers urged the Committee to lessen restrictions in the House-passed bill.

Complete removal of cotton production curbs was suggested Aug. 10 by Sen William F. Knowland (R Calif.) who pointed to the troubled international situation as the signal to produce enough cotton for U. S. forces and those of "our allies".

Rep. Cecil F. White (D Calif.) said "it seems foolhardy" to restrict cotton production in the face of the emergency and said during World War II the U. S. used all its pre-war cotton surplus.

Rep. Thomas H. Werdel (R Calif.) said the cotton quota bill discouraged production on lands most suited for it by limiting an individual farmer's cotton acreage to the proportion of his county's total crop land planted in cotton. This "guarantees a profit to the marginal producer," he said.

Then, on Aug. 28, the Committee appointed a five-man subcommittee to study proposed amendments to the cotton-peanut acreage bill. The group was composed of Sens. Allen J. Ellender (D La.), Clyde R. Hoey (D N.C.), Clinton P. Anderson (D N.M.), George D. Aiken (R Vt.), and Milton R. Young (R N.D.).

Ultimately, however, the full Committee on Sept. 5 voted 5 to 2 to shelve HR 9109. The Committee decided instead to report S 3135 by Clyde Hoey (D N.C.) and Frank Graham (D N.C.), which set only the peanut quotas. The Hoey-Graham bill also set up three categories of peanuts, the Virginia-Carolina, Runner and Spanish. Quotas were to be set by the Secretary of Agriculture, based on this year's production.

A Committee member said Sens. Allen J. Ellender (S La.) and Hoey voted for HR 9109, and that George D. Aiken (R Vt.), Edward J. Thye (R Minn.), Milton R. Young (R N.D.), Spessard L. Holland (D Fla.), and Clinton P. Anderson (D N.M.) voted against the measure.

Action on the Hoey-Graham peanut allotment bill was reported to be unanimous.

Food Price Investigation

SUMMARY

As food prices continued to mount during 1950, a Subcommittee of the Senate Agriculture and Forestry Committee continued its multi-phase investigation of the utilization of farm crops, which included a study of the spread of prices between the producer and consumer. (The Subcommittee, headed by Guy M. Gillette (D Iowa), had started its work in 1949 under a resolution passed April 11 of that year. The 81st Congress authorized $50,000 for the group's project.)

The 1950 investigation covered price spreads in coffee, milk and dairy products, and meats. The hearings on coffee resulted in a controversial report that called on the Justice Department to investigate the practices of foreign coffee interests in the U. S. The Subcommittee concluded that the coffee price rise was due to speculation and not to a shortage.

Also in 1950, the Gillette group released a report on fats and oils based on hearings conducted during 1949. Other reports, which the Subcommittee expected to issue before the completion of its work, were a general survey and reports on milk, meat, and bread. Hearings on bread were conducted during 1949.

COFFEE HEARINGS

With the rise of coffee prices during 1949, the Subcommittee opened an investigation of the coffee market, with brief hearings in December. The probe was taken up again in 1950 with a cumulative total of eight days of hearings that began March 7 and continued into May.

Among the two dozen witnesses were foods corporation officials, Pan American Coffee Bureau spokesmen, importers, government officials, and officers of the New York Coffee and Sugar Exchange.

Statements included the assertion of General Foods Corporation officials that the price rises were due to a "statistical" shortage, and the Pan American Coffee Bureau contention that the coffee price was high because "people are drinking more than is being produced."

Francis M. Kurtz, head of the Atlantic & Pacific grocery chain's coffee division, testified March 14 that his first profit on the sale of a pound of coffee had not increased, despite the rise in sale price.

Robert E. Atkinson, president of the New York Coffee and Sugar Exchange, said April 11 that one Brazilian trader had built up $3,035 to a profit of $207,403 since July, 1949. Most of the buying of coffee futures contracts in previous months had been by Brazilian interests, Atkinson asserted. Atkinson denied the Exchange was responsible for the price rise, after Gillette sharply criticized the form of contract used in coffee futures trading.

The Subcommittee reported that another firm, Escriptorio Suplicy, of Sao Paulo and Santos, Brazil, had netted profits of more than $3 million in the preceding nine months.

A study by the Subcommittee staff released May 29, showed coffee consumption in the U. S. dropped about 20 per cent during the first four months of 1950.

Report Brings Protest

A formal report issued June 9 by the Subcommittee demanded sharp curbs on coffee speculation. The Gillette group urged government supervision of the New York Coffee and Sugar Exchange, and asked the Justice Department to file suit unless foreign coffee interests disposed of stock in channels of trade.

On June 20, the State Department joined 14 Latin American diplomats in protesting against the report. The State Department said the report was hurting "good neighbor" relations, and asked that it be revised. Its plea was made to the full Agriculture Committee, which then granted the request for revision.

The reworded report came out Aug. 22. It still did not meet with State Department approval, and the next day Secretary of State Dean Acheson said it would still be regarded by Latin American countries as hostile to "their legitimate economic interests." However, the Senators did not rework the report again.

OTHER HEARINGS

The Gillette Subcommittee held hearings on milk and dairy products during June, July, and August.

Reflecting his concern for price rises following the start of Korean hostilities, Gillette in August asserted "profiteers" contributed to the increases "just as much or more" than hoarders. In urging food distributors to sign "We Will Not Profiteer" pledges, Gillette said food price controls would not be needed if distributors and consumers both used restraint.

The Subcommittee opened hearings on meat price spread on Sept. 7 and concluded them Nov. 30. Witnesses included representatives of such packing firms as Wilson and Company, Cudahy Packing Co., Swift and Co., and Armour & Co. On Nov. 30 the United Packinghouse Workers of America (CIO) asserted meat dealers were profiteering. The National Association of Retail Meat and Food Dealers, Inc., also represented that day, denied the charge.

The reports on the Subcommittee's findings as a result of its study of the milk and dairy and meat industries were among those the group intended to submit at a future time.

Marketing Facilities

HR 9141

On July 17, 1950, Chairman Harold D. Cooley (D N.C.) of the House Agriculture Committee introduced legislation (HR 9141) which was designed to aid cities in building modern wholesale marketing facilities to handle perishable agricultural commodities. The bill also authorized a "marketing facility mortgage insurance fund", to be financed by a subsequent $25 million appropriation. In addition to creation of this revolving fund, HR 9141 authorized the Secretary of Agriculture to insure mortgages under the general terms of the legislation up to limit of $100 million.

Was "Clean Bill"

Cooley's bill represented a "clean" measure embodying a previous bill (HR 8320) which had earlier been studied by his Committee in connection with proposed legislation to provide federal - guaranteed loans for the improvement of municipal marketing facilities.

Hearings had been held on HR 8320 on June 6, 7, 8 and 9, 1950. Among witnesses testifying in favor of such legislation was Albert S. Goss, Master of the National Grange. Goss told the Committee one of the most serious problems facing farmers stems from congestion at terminal markets lacking facilities to handle fruit, vegetables, and other perishable commodities.

New Agency?

Rep. Clifford Hope (R Kan.) stated a new federal agency might be needed to administer the loans and an insurance plan also carried in the Cooley proposal, but a second witness, Emerson Custis, Philadelphia realtor, contended the Agriculture Department could handle the program.

On Aug. 7, the Agriculture group reported Cooley's "clean" bill (HR 9141), and the House passed it by voice vote on Aug. 22. But the Senate Agriculture Committee, to which HR 9141 was referred, pigeonholed the bill Sept. 5, and the measure failed to get further action.

Forest Service

An omnibus bill providing for a number of minor changes in the administration of the Forest Service was approved by both houses without controversy on the floor.

The bill was introduced in 1949 by Rep. Walter K. Granger (D Utah). The House passed it Aug. 15, 1949, and it was approved by the Senate Agriculture and Forestry Committee Sept. 13, 1949. (CQ Almanac Vol. V, p. 159)

The bill provided for numerous changes in Acts regulating the Forest Service. Most changes broadened the discretion of the Forest Service in leasing land, purchasing equipment and extending injury benefits to personnel.

The Senate passed the measure Feb. 14, 1950, after accepting several amendments by voice votes. The amendments had been offered by Joseph C. O'Mahoney (D Wyo.). They authorized setting up of advisory boards to work with the Forest Service, authorized the Secretary of Agriculture to grant 10-year grazing permits, earmarked a certain amount of grazing fees for range improvements, and added other minor provisions.

The Senate amendments were accepted by a conference committee March 29. The House agreed to the conference report April 3 on voice vote, and the Senate passed it April 13, also on voice vote. The President signed the measure April 24, and it became Public Law No. 478.

Congress passed without controversy a bill to make direct government loans available to certain farm areas.

The bill (S 2996) was designed to revive a loan program which had expired the previous year. It authorized the Secretary of Agriculture to extend loans to growers in areas where no other loans are available. Each loan would be limited to $10,000, and total loans outstanding were limited to $2 million. Most loans previously had been made to disaster areas, according to the Senate Agriculture Committee.

Warren Magnuson (D Wash.) introduced the measure in the Senate Feb. 6. His bill merely revived the loans with limitations. The Agriculture Committee approved the bill April 19. The Senate passed it on voice vote June 8 after accepting, also on voice vote, an amendment by Robert C. Hendrickson (R N. J.) limiting the amount of the loans.

The House Agriculture Committee had been considering a similar bill (HR 8613) by Walt Horan (R Wash.). The Committee substituted provisions of the Senate-passed bill and reported the measure July 24 under the House bill number. It was passed without amendment by voice vote July 27 under the Senate number. The President signed it Aug. 5, and it became Public Law No. 665.

Congress approved with little discussion a bill (S 2636) to extend a federal soil conservation program for two years.

As introduced, the bill called for indefinite extension of direct federal payments for conservation practices, and would have repealed provisions whereby the program was eventually to be placed on a grants-in-aid basis. The bill was endorsed in that form by the Agriculture Department, which said only 23 states had shown interest in continuing the program if it were a grants-in-aid plan.

The American Farm Bureau Federation told the Senate Agriculture Committee that the direct federal subsidy should not be continued indefinitely without lengthy study of the program. The Farm Bureau recommended a two-year extension pending outcome of a study.

The Senate Committee amended the bill to provide for a simple two-year extension of direct federal payments and then reported the measure unanimously July 11. The Senate passed it on voice vote July 26 without debate and without amendment.

The House had already approved a bill (HR 9109) containing similar provisions, so the Senate bill went directly to the House floor. Passage was again on voice vote without debate or amendment. The President signed it Sept. 23, and it became Public Law 817.

Congress in 1950 approved a bill (HR 7155) to provide technical assistance to private forest owners. There was no opposition in either house.

The bill was introduced by Robert L. F. Sikes (D Fla.) Feb. 6. It authorized the Agriculture Department to aid owners of private forest and shrub plantations in the management of their lands and in the production, harvesting, utilization and marketing of their products. A total of $2.5 million was authorized to carry out the program.

The House Agriculture Committee reported the measure May 3, and the House passed it without amendment or debate May 15 on voice vote. The Senate Agriculture Committee amended the bill to specify that the government assistance would not displace service by commercial foresters. The Committee approved the bill unanimously June 20. The Senate passed it Aug. 9 without debate on voice vote. The House agreed to the Senate amendment Aug. 16, and the President signed the measure Aug. 25.

Nominations

Major Presidential nominations in the general agriculture field in 1950 concerned officials of the U. S. Department of Agriculture who were named to be directors of the Commodity Credit Corporation.

On Feb. 3, the Senate Agriculture Committee approved the nominations of these persons to be CCC directors: Knox T. Hutchinson of Tennessee, Assistant Secretary of Agriculture; Albert J. Loveland of Iowa, Under-Secretary of Agriculture; Ralph S. Trigg of New Mexico, Production Marketing Administration; Frank K. Woolley of Indiana, PMA; William B. Crawley of Alabama, PMA; and Elmer F. Kruse of Ohio, PMA.

The six nominees were confirmed to their new posts by the Senate on March 8.

Later in the year, the Senate also confirmed on Aug. 22 the nomination of Clarence McCormick of Indiana to be another director of the CCC.

APPROPRIATIONS

Major Actions

Deficiency appropriations bills - enacted into law (pages 110 and 111).

Omnibus appropriations legislation - enacted into law (page 113).

Supplemental appropriations bills - enacted into law (pages 130 and 139).

Summary, charts of all appropriations measures (pages 104 and 105).

Summary

Congress shelled out a record-breaking peacetime total of more than $60 billion for the government in 1950 before the legislators went home to campaign. Then they returned to appropriate an additional $20 billion during their "lame duck" session. Of the staggering total, three out of every four dollars, or approximately $60 billion, went to pay for wars.

There were five funds bills. Two were needed for unforeseen (deficiency) costs of fiscal 1950. One — the biggest of all — was the general "omnibus" bill, financing in a lump sum all government departments and agencies. The last two bills were for Korean war emergency expenses in fiscal 1951, and for building up America's military preparedness; together they contained more money than the three previous bills combined. The total new money appropriated in the five bills was $74,901,869,566.

Moreover, Congress was required by law to provide additional billions for permanent and fixed expenses of government. The sum for fiscal 1951 amounted to $8,774,187,804. By far the greatest chunk of this — about $5.6 billion — was earmarked for interest on the public debt.

The grand total of federal outlay during the second session was $83,-676,057,370.

Comparisons

It was the June outbreak of war in Korea that shattered economy plans and sent federal spending upward. Prior to then Congress actually had slashed President Truman's requests by more than $2 billion, according to its own estimates.

But once the war effort began, new expenses spurted and the military got, directly, $48,942,783,169. Directly or indirectly, another $7 to $10 billion went to pay for expenses of past conflicts.

Final appropriations for two of the most expensive war years (1944 and 1945) were, respectively, $128,010,348,-539 and $75,657,753,925, excluding public debt and other permanent expenses. Comparable appropriations for fiscal 1947, the first full peacetime year, were $34,224,629,729. Total appropriations in 1948 were $45,650,845,-063. In 1949 they amounted to $50,-983,371,219.

What Bills Were

The five 1950 measures passed and the amounts in each were:

1. The 1950 Urgent Deficiency Bill, signed by President Truman March 27, appropriated $837,614,600 mostly for the Veterans Administration and the Atomic Energy Commission.

2. The 1950 Deficiency Bill, signed into law June 29, provided $653,761,-608 largely for defraying salaries and other legal obligations of the government, and $35,000,000 in contract authority.

3. The precedent-making Omnibus Appropriations Bill, providing $36,-153,600,425 for all general government expenses in fiscal 1951, was signed September 6.

4. Signed by the president Sept. 27, the 1951 Supplemental Appropriations Bill carried $17,157,402,285 for emergency war and defense needs, plus $18 million in borrowing authority for the Farmers Home Administration.

5. The Second Supplemental Appropriations Bill, passed by the "lame duck" session and signed by the President on Jan. 6, 1951, appropriated a total of $20,065,412,938 in cash and contract authority for further emergency defense and rearmament costs.

Budget Estimates

President Truman's 1950 budget message asked for general funds totaling $42,205,681,721, including permanent appropriations. He said there would be a financial deficit in fiscal 1951, since federal income would amount only to a little more than $37 billions.

In passing the $36 billion "omnibus" bill, Congress figured it had cut the President's budget estimates by $2,-298,757,723 since it acted on requests amounting to $38,452,358,148, exclusive of permanent appropriations. Much of the claimed cut in the omnibus bill was reflected by a $550 million slash voted by Congress. (See page 113.)

Deficiency estimates submitted for fiscal 1950 expenses $1,538,586,543. In two deficiency bills, Congress granted a total of $1,507,300,108 to meet these costs.

Korean Reverses

In mid-July, American forces were suffering severe reverses in Korea, and the President rushed to Capitol Hill a request for $17,327,658,634 to finance the emergency defense and rearmament of America and its allies. The Congress cut this to a final appropriation of $17,175,402,225 in cash and contract authority, with nearly $16 billion earmarked specifically for war.

President Truman's budget estimates for the fifth and final 1950 appropriations bill totalled $19,925,666,-938. Congress finally handed him a measure that appropriated even more than he wanted: $20,065,412,938. Virtually every cent in the bill, like the one that went before it, was for defense.

Urgent Deficiency Appropriation

HR 7207–P. L. 468

SUMMARY

The House March 20 and the Senate March 21 approved by voice votes a conference version of the year's first urgent deficiency appropriations bill (HR 7207), providing $739,653,500 in cash and $78,885,000 in contract authority for nine money - short government agencies and departments.

Funds approved by the House had totaled $732,485,500 in cash and $78,885,000 in contract power, the latter to go to the Atomic Energy Commission. The Senate increased the cash to $758,729,600 and gave the requested $78,885,000 to the AEC.

Included in the additional funds voted by the Senate was $4 million for the Office of Housing Expediter for continued administration of the rent control law. However, $2.6 million of this was earmarked for terminal leave payments to the agency's employes — a move looking toward the end of federal rent surveillance, and only $1.4 million was for actual OHE operations.

This feature prevailed in the conference version and was in the bill as it went to the White House and was signed.

HOUSE

The House gave only perfunctory attention to the deficiency measure, passing it exactly as it came from the Appropriations Committee.

Budget estimates sent the committee had amounted to $830,911,600 and $78,650,000 in cash and contract authority, respectively, for 10 agencies and departments. The bill was reported Feb. 8 with only four recommendations:

Veterans Administration, $720,000,000 in cash;

Interior Dept.'s Indian Bureau, $803,000 cash;

Tennessee Valley Authority, $11,682,500 cash; and

Atomic Energy Commission, $78,885,000 in contract power.

This made a total recommendation of $732,485,500 cash and $78,885,000 contract, or a rough 10 per cent cut in the budget estimates for these particular agencies.

After brief debate, the House passed the bill Feb. 9 and sent it to the Senate.

SENATE

Committee

The Deficiency Appropriations Subcommittee of the Senate Appropriations Committee wound up its work on the bill Feb. 22, approving considerably fattened cash funds amounting to $750,379,100, but leaving the AEC contract authority at the House figure. The cash included the same funds for agencies that had been in the House bill, but it also contained money for the six other agencies for which there had been budget estimates but which had been ignored by the House. New items written into the bill included:

$3.6 million for the rent control program;

$4.5 million for forest pest control work of the Agriculture Dept.;

$630,000 for the Bureau of Reclamation's San Luis Valley project in Colorado;

$245,600 for the Lewiston Orchards project in Idaho;

$8,500,000 for general flood control activities of the Army Dept.; and $168,000 for the Dept. of Labor's seamen's unemployment compensation.

$250,000 for the Legislative branch, including funds for beneficiaries of deceased Congressmen and miscellaneous expenses.

Rent Control Cut

The Appropriations Committee three days later took up the deficiency measure and approved all the subcommittee's recommendations except the $3.6 million for rent control - enforcing OHE. From this item, it cut $1 million, making its total cash recommendations $749,379,100.

Striking deeply at the rent program, the committee flatly instructed the OHE to use the $2.6 million it was allowed exclusively for paying terminal leave of the agency's several thousand employes. In its report, the committee indicated it thought the time had come for a halt in rent controls.

This action, however, quickly aroused a furor among proponents of rent control and others who thought rent control should be ended in a more orderly manner than by denial of operating funds while the law still stood on the books. John J. Sparkman (D Ala.) expressed himself as being in the latter category, while Herbert H. Lehman (D N. Y.) opposed the move because he said he wanted another full year of rent ceilings. But Spessard L. Holland (D Fla.), Charles W. Tobey (R N. H.) and Ralph E. Flanders (R Vt.) expressed approval of the committee's action.

The Senate took up the measure March 9 and passed it by voice vote. But first, by roll-call vote, it achieved a compromise on the controversial rent - control feature. On another record tally, it turned down an attempt by Paul H. Douglas (D Ill.) to cut down annual leave of federal workers. (See vote chart, p. 151).

Funds granted amounted to $758,729,600 in cash and $78,885,000 in contract authority. A total of $9,350,500 was added to the bill as it came from the Appropriations Committee by amendments accepted from the floor.

The major floor change, however, was in the rent-control item. By the time the legislation got to the floor, even members of the Appropriations Committee favoring the amendment had begun to backtrack. Chairman Kenneth McKellar (D Tenn.) explained the group had acted "rather hurriedly and nonchalantly" and he stressed that funds should be provided to enforce the present law as long as it was on the books.

Compromise Reached

A bipartisan compromise was then worked out between Joseph C. O'Mahoney (D Wyo.) and Harry P. Cain (R Wash.), long an opponent of rent control. The compromise allowed $1.4 million of additional "free money" for the rent program's remaining operations in fiscal 1950 but left the same $2.6 million earmarked for whittling down the agency's staff by June. The O'Mahoney - Cain plan was accepted on a roll-call vote of 44 to 28.

Douglas Rider

Douglas started another kind of controversy when he moved next to attach a rider to the bill cutting down the annual leave of federal employes from 26 to 20 days — a move he said would save the government $100 million a year. Edwin C. Johnson (D Colo.) objected to the Douglas amendment on the grounds it was not germane to the bill. His objection was sustained. Douglas lost his motion to overturn the decision by a roll-call vote of 14 to 57.

AMENDMENTS AGREED TO

Joseph C. O'Mahoney (D Wyo.) — Provide $4 million for the OHE, of which $2.6 million would be used to pay terminal leave only. Roll - call vote, 44-28.

O'Mahoney — Provide $2,200,000 to fight grasshoppers. Voice.

Spessard L. Holland (D Fla.) — Provide $1 million for levee repair in Florida. Voice vote.

Russell B. Long (D La.) — Provide $4 million for emergency flood control. Voice vote.

Carl Hayden (D Ariz.) — $750,000 for Interior Dept.'s Boulder Canyon project. Voice.

AMENDMENTS REJECTED

Paul H. Douglas (D Ill.) — Cut annual leave of government workers from 26 to 20 days, sick leave from 15 to 12 days. Ruled not germane; Douglas lost move to overrule decision, 14-57 on roll-call vote.

CONFERENCE

The conferees submitted their report March 20, having whittled $19,076,100 from the amount approved by the Senate, but approving $7,168,000 more than the amount the House had voted. The rent-control money was agreed upon as it came from the Senate. The conference committee recommended $739,653,500 in cash and $78,885,000 in contract authorization.

Final Action

The latter amounts were approved by voice votes of the House and Senate March 20 and 21, respectively. The House accepted the compromise virtually without comment. But in the Senate, objections were raised to conference slashes by Russell B. Long (D La.), sponsor of funds for emergency flood control work on the Mississippi River, and Spessard L. Holland (D Fla.), who had backed funds for similar work in his home state, both of which items had been dropped by the conferees.

Here is a recapitulation of the bill as it became law:

Deficiency Fund Bill

SUMMARY

The year's second — and final — 1950 deficiency appropriations bill (HR 8567), largely for defraying the salary expenses of federal employes and other legal obligations of the government, was signed into law (P.L. 583) by President Truman June 29, 1950. It carried $653,761,608.40 in cash and $35 million in contract authority. The cash included:

$50 million in economic aid for Korea;

$75 million for the National Advisory Committee for Aeronautics to speed construction of trans-sonic and supersonic wind tunnels; and

$20 million for an Air Engineering Development Center for research on supersonic planes.

The budget estimates had been $611,500,130.40. The approved total reflected a big increase in the funds granted for the NACA wind tunnel program.

The measure went through Congress in a little more than a month — a relatively short time — but money to meet salaries of government employes was so short that a temporary financing resolution (H J Res 476) had to be passed in the interval to avert threatened "payless paydays". The resolution enabled agencies to draw on the Treasury for payroll expenses, pending final action on the deficiency bill.

The course of HR 8567 through the legislative mills of Congress was less eventful than the route of the previous deficiency appropriation bill. The House passed it May 22, on a voice vote, after making only a minor change in the bill as reported by the Appropriations Committee. The change was the elimination of funds House members themselves had sought for extra stationery and communications expenses. The total as the bill went to the Senate was $625,493,694.37. The Senate upped the total to $660,272,508.40 and added $35 million in contract authority. It then endorsed the bill June 22 on a voice vote.

A House-Senate conference committee scaled down the appropriation to $653,761,608.40, leaving intact the $35 million in contracts. The compromise was passed on voice votes by both the House and Senate on June 26 and sent to the White House, where it was promptly signed into law.

Votes

The House passed HR 8567 May 22 by voice vote.

The Senate exactly one month later — on June 22 — approved the measure, also on a voice vote.

Endorsements by both the House and Senate were stamped June 26 on the conferees' compromise version of the bill. Action of the two chambers was by voice.

President Truman signed the legislation June 29.

BACKGROUND

In 1949, Congress passed, over a period of five months, three deficiency bills providing in all $1,557,228,802 in funds for nearly every federal agency.

The First Deficiency Bill of 1949 passed Congress in final form May 16, carrying $524,649,473 for government obligations of that year. It was approved as P. L. 71 on May 24 and was considered noteworthy because of the heated debate it raised over the construction of a steam plant at New Johnsonville, Tenn., to strengthen TVA's hydroelectric power. Efforts to eliminate this item by public power foes were defeated in both chambers. (See Almanac, Vol. V, page 233).

Cleared June 20, the Second Deficiency Bill of 1949 was signed by President Truman June 23 and became P. L. 119. It carried $854,838,710 for various agencies and departments for the then-current fiscal year, including $5.4 million to renovate the White House. (See Almanac, Vol. V, page 237).

Deficiency funds amounting to $177,740,619 were appropriated in the Third Deficiency Bill of that year which was finally enacted Oct. 6 and approved Oct. 10 as P. L. 358. Its total money was $177,740,619, which included regular funds to run the National Labor Relations Board and the Federal Mediation and Conciliation Services in the fiscal year then current. These agencies had been omitted when their regular appropriations bill — the one for the Labor Dept. — was passed. This was because the House was at the time engaged in debating repeal of the Taft - Hartley Act and Congress wanted to see the outcome of this move before financing the NLRB and the FCMS for the year. (See Almanac, Vol V, page 240).

HOUSE

Committee

The House Appropriations Committee reported HR 8567 May 19, recommending a total of $625,756,494.37. Budget estimates before the Committee had been $605,024,943.37.

The increase over estimates resulted, in the main, from a Commitee-recommended appropriation of $75 million for the National Advisory Committee on Aeronautics to begin construction of trans-sonic and supersonic wind tunnels. The Unitary Wind Tunnel Plan Act of 1949 (S 1267-P.L. 415—CQ Almanac, Vol. V, p. 487) had authorized appropriation of $146 million for this purpose.

The Committee had considered a request for $5 million in cash and contract authorization of $15 million to get the program started. But it decided that it would be an economy to up the appropriation to $75 million in cash instead. In its report, the Committee said it understood this amount was sufficient "for initiation and completion" of the program as authorized and that no more money would be asked.

Excluding this increase, the Committee reduced other estimates $46,268,449.

A sum of $50 million was provided for aid to Korea to be administered by the Economic Cooperation Administration. Estimates for this purpose had been $60 million. The enabling legislation for this appropriation was originally defeated by the House when it came up for passage early in the session, but was carried later when a new vote was taken. (For account of this foreign policy action, see page 223.)

In addition to these funds, the greater portion of the bill's total was "for defraying legal obligations of the Government over which the Committee itself has little or no control." For example, $99,433,200 was provided for the Post Office Department. Another $40,167,500 was put up for fixed public assistance grants administered by the Federal Security Agency.

For veterans' pensions and miscellaneous benefits, few of which could be scaled down, the bill included $246,151,900. Also included in the Committee bill was $761,796,352 to pay for increased Federal salaries and travel costs provided in legislation enacted in the 81st Congress' first session. (CQ Almanac, Vol. V, pp. 567ff.)

Funds to pay for claims and judgments against the government, to the extent of $8,627,922, were included, as was the sum of $600,000 for the Office of Housing Expediter, which administers rent control.

Floor Action

Although HR 8567 was reported on May 19, action on it had not been rapid enough to avert threatened "payless paydays" for federal employes. Much of the bill's money was to pay their salaries. To meet the situation, the House May 19 passed a resolution (H J Res 476) enabling the agencies involved to draw on the Treasury for salaries and pensions up to July 1, pending final action on the deficiency bill. The Senate approved the resolution May 23 after adding a prohibition against any of the funds being used to pay for new activities or new pay boosts. The House agreed to the Senate amendment, and the President signed the resolution May 26.

The House formally took up HR 8567 itself on May 22 and passed it by voice vote, after a minimum of debate. Final passage, however, was preceded by an unsuccessful, Republican-led atempt to earmark part of the bill's rent control funds for liquidation of that program. This was taken as a mild echo of the Senate fight on rent control money when the previous deficiency bill had been before Congress. (For this story, see Urgent Deficiency Bill, page 110.)

The $600,000 in the bill for the OHE was attacked on the floor by Rep. John Phillips (R Calif.), who declared it was time Congress took a stand on rent control. He offered an amendment to earmark 50 per cent of the appropriation for payment of terminal leave of OHE employes, in a manner similar to that provided in the urgent deficiency funds bill. The Phillips proposal was defeated on a division vote.

Before the final vote, the House eliminated on a point of order a section of the bill that would have given representatives an extra $262,800 — about $600 apiece — for more stationary and communications expenses. This was the only change made in the bill as reported by the Committee.

The section was marked out when Rep. Errett P. Scrivner (R Kan.) raised a point of order against it on the grounds it was not germane to HR 8567.

Afterwards, the bill was approved by voice and sent to the Senate, containing $625,493,694.37.

AMENDMENTS REJECTED

Phillips (R Calif.) — Earmark 50 per cent of rent control funds for terminal leave pay to OHE employes. Division, 36 to 62.

Wayne N. Aspinall (D Colo.) — Add $3,620,000 for fighting spruce forest beetles. Division, 40 to 48.

SENATE

Committee

The Senate Appropriations Committee considered HR 8567 for about a month and reported its recommendations June 21.

The bill it worked out appropriated $34,805,987.03 more than had the House measure. This upped the total to $660,299,681.40. The Senate group had considered more estimates than had the House Committee, or a total of $611,500,130.40.

Money added by the Senate Committee included $20 million for the Air Force to complete the Air Engineering Development Center at Tullahoma, Tenn., for work on supersonic planes. The enabling legislation for this project was S 1267 (P. L. 415), the same measure which authorized the NACA wind tunnel program, also financed by HR 8567.

Contract authority for the AEDC amounting to $35 million, was also added, as were these other items:

$3.5 million more for the NACA's wind tunnel program; $3,620,000 for the Agriculture Dept.'s anti - forest-insect work in Colorado, Idaho and Wyoming; $4 million for the Post Office Dept. to meet longevity-of-service pay increases for rural mail carriers, as provided in HR 6553 - P. L. 500; and $2 million for the President's disaster relief fund.

Floor Action

June 22, one day after the Committee made its report, the Senate took up the money bill and passed it without comment. The final vote was by voice.

Passage came after the chamber first accepted all Committee amendments to the bill. The only change proposed from the floor came from Chairman Kenneth McKellar (D Tenn.), of the Senate Appropriations Committee. He offered an amendment to a Committee amendment and his proposal, which was adopted, had the effect of cutting an additional $27,173 from funds for the Labor Dept.'s Solicitor's Office. Final funds for the Labor Solicitor amounted to $64,127, as against a budget estimate of $207,000.

Thus, as it went to conference, the bill contained $660,272,508.40.

CONFERENCE

By this time, the July 1 deadline set by the temporary resolution which filled in the money gaps while HR 8567 was in the legislative mills was fast approaching. A House - Senate conference group on HR 8567 met without delay, and its action was so rapid that it was ready with a report late June 22, the same day the Senate passed the bill.

The money total agreed upon by the conference was $653,761,608.40. This was $6,510,900 less than the Senate had approved, and $28,267,914.03 more than the House had voted.

The conferees left intact the $50 million in economic aid for South Korea, which three days later was to be attacked by North Korea.

The conference cuts included:

$1,620,000 from the Senate-inserted forest pest control fund, leaving $2 million for that purpose, and $3.5 million for the NACA's wind tunnel project, leaving the House figure of $75 million.

Smaller cuts from operational funds for the various agencies made up the total slash.

Final Action

Four days after the conference report was submitted, both the House and Senate on June 26 approved HR 8567, sending it to the White House for the President's signature.

LAW ENACTED

The President signed the bill June 29 and it became Public Law 583.

Omnibus Funds Bill

HR 7786 — P. L. 759

SUMMARY

President Truman Sept. 6 signed into law modern history's first omnibus appropriations bill (HR 7786), providing in one lump $36,153,600,425 to operate all government agencies and departments in fiscal 1951. It contained $14,680,084,443 for defense costs.

The President had asked for a budget totaling $38,452,358,148. Congress reduced this by $2,298,757,723. Defense expenditures were reduced $82,565,557 below estimates.

In 1949, eleven bills were enacted to finance the various operations of the government. The omnibus measure was two months overdue when it was signed, since fiscal 1951 began July 1, 1950. But even so, the general government financing job was accomplished in much less time than it had required the previous year. For in 1949, four of the eleven individual money measures had been delayed until mid-October. Moreover, these four had included military appropriations. (CQ Almanac, Vol. V, p. 183 ff.).

It took only two emergency 30-day "continuing" resolutions (HJ Res 492 and HJ Res 512) in 1950 to keep the government in general funds pending passage of the big money bill. (See page 130.) In 1949, Congress enacted four of them.

Final action on the precedent-making omnibus bill came relatively early in the House, where it was passed May 10, on a 362-21 roll-call vote. It carried a total of $31,820,689,664 in combined cash, contract authority and borrowing power. But this did not include foreign economic and military aid, for which enabling legislation was not finished at the time.

After lengthy debate, the Senate passed the measure by voice vote Aug. 4. It contained a total of $37,093,322,231, including the foreign aid funds.

The bulky bill was reported by the House-Senate conferees Aug. 24. Final agreements on the compromise were reached by both chambers Aug.

28, on voice votes. Technically, the bill's total at that time showed up as $36,703,600,425. But the two bodies had agreed upon an economy plan under which the Bureau of the Budget was directed to reduce that amount by $550 million. While not told where to make the cuts, the Bureau was instructed to make them "in such a manner as not to impair national defense."

In accordance with the order, the Bureau by Oct. 10 had worked out a reduction scheme that, in the end, actually trimmed more than Congress had wanted — its total was $580,271,335. Thirty-one agencies and departments were picked to bear a share of the cut.

Spanish Loan

As the President received the bill from Congress in late August, it contained provision for a $62.5 million loan to Spain which he had vigorously opposed. This item appeared at first to pose the threat of a veto. Had he turned down the loan, he would have had to kill all the other funds as well, for appropriations must be accepted or rejected by the executive in toto.

He resolved the dilemma when he signed the bill Sept. 6, by stating that he did not consider the provision a "directive" but as an "authorization" — such as was already in existing law.

General Provisions:

Language was written in to require a more careful apportionment of appropriated funds to keep government spending within ceilings fixed by Congress in its money bills. Designed to lessen or prevent the need for deficiency appropriations, the provision specifically exempted from any restrictions expenditures for the government price support program, interest on the public debt, payment of claims, judgments and refunds, items of a confidential nature, private relief acts and contingent expenses of the House and Senate.

The many methods in existing law for transferring appropriations from one agency account to another were abolished in favor of the simplified procedure of requiring each future transfer to be made by check. A prohibition was added to prohibit the transfer of unused funds in any way which would prevent their reversion to the Treasury if the funds normally would revert.

Government employees were required to take annual leave each year as it was earned, instead of allowing it to accumulate for future use.

Summary dismissal powers over employees were granted to the Secretary of Commerce. A renewal of such powers previously held by the Secretary of State also was written into the bill.

The Bureau of the Budget was directed to cut $550 million from the bill "without impairing national defense."

Votes

The House passed HR 7786 on May 10 on a roll-call vote, 362 to 21.

It was passed on a voice vote in the Senate Aug. 4.

The compromise version was agreed to tenatively by the House Aug. 25. Both the House and Senate finally approved it Aug. 28, on voice votes, after the House had agreed to a disputed appropriation for a new Senate Committee on Foreign Economic Cooperation to replace the Joint Committee on Foreign Economic Cooperation (the so-called "Watchdog" Committee). The conferees had been unable to iron out this point and left the decision up to the two chambers.

BACKGROUND

The single-package method of making government appropriations was employed by the early Congresses, but appropriations already had begun to be divided in 1794, when the Congress passed two general acts, one for the support of the government and one for the support of the military establishment. Later in 1799, Congress passed a separate appropriation act for the Navy Department, which had just been created.

By 1880, 13 separate annual appropriations bills were enacted by Congress. In subsequent years it took from 10 to 20 bills each year to finance the government.

The return in this era to the omnibus approach was largely the work of Rep. Clarence Cannon (D Mo.), chairman of the House Appropriations Committee, and Sen. Harry Flood Byrd (D Va.), who long has headed the Joint Committee on Reduction of Non - Essential Federal Expenditures.

It was Byrd who first proposed the consolidated bill which finally was tried in 1950. He introduced a resolution (S Con Res 6) early in the first session of the Republican - controlled 80th Congress, requiring the use of an omnibus money measure. Hearings were held by the Rules and Administration Committee, and the bill was reported June 26, 1947. But no action ever was taken.

While long an advocate of the plan, Cannon did not actively push it until the 81st Congress convened under control of the Democrats. On May 26, 1949, he outlined in a House speech his plan for introducing an omnibus money bill in 1950. He said he believed authorizing legislation was not necessary.

But Byrd played it safe and offered a resolution (S Con Res 18) authorizing the omnibus bill. It passed the Senate Sept. 27, 1949, but the House never did act on it.

Immediately after the second session got underway in 1950, the Senate Appropriations Committee met and Chairman Kenneth McKellar (D Tenn.) appointed a subcommittee to confer with members of the House Appropriations Committee on plans for handling the single-shot bill.

As they were finally worked out, the President's budget estimates for the various government departments and agencies went, as in the past, to subcommittees for the important "spade" work. These groups held hearings and reported their recommendations to the full committees.

In the House Appropriations Committee, the recommendations went first to a "central subcommittee" which screened the individual subcommittees' work before turning the findings over to the full committee for final perusal.

In the Senate Appropriations Committee, the subcommittees' recommendations went directly to the full committee.

In both cases, the full committees made changes as they saw fit in the recommendations before finally rolling them into the omnibus version and reporting it to the chamber floor.

House

Hearings

Witnesses appearing before the House Appropriations Committee were, in the main, government officials who were called upon to explain the functions of their respective agencies and bureaus and to "justify" the appropriation requested to finance these functions in the then-upcoming fiscal year. This is the procedure customarily followed when a Committee takes up the complex budget issue each year.

As usual, the Committee also went "outside" to get the viewpoints of individuals and groups across the nation who were interested, in some way, in one or more of the myriad appropriation items.

This "outside" testimony, together with that of the many government witnesses, ran to 45 printed volumes when the House hearings were finally printed.

The efforts of the government witnesses were, without exception, directed toward persuading the Committee to recommend an appropriation equal to or in excess of that asked in the President's annual budget.

It was from the "outside" that most of the economy demands came. But, roughly speaking, for every call for thrift, there was some individual or group in the country that wanted the Committee to write a bigger check for some federal agency or function.

Here is a summary of the stands taken by the groups that testified:

Committee

Total budget estimates before the Committee were: cash, $30,382,781,168; contract authorizations, $1,961,149,500; and loan authorizations, $610,000,000.

These total estimates of $32,953,930,668 did not include funds for European economic aid, the military assistance program or permanent or indefinite appropriations, which amounted in all to $11,593,751,053. Foreign-aid authorizations were still under study at the time. The estimates acted upon by the Committee plus the total it did not consider constituted the entire $42.7 billion "deficit" budget submitted by President Truman to Congress at the beginning of the session. It was a "deficit" budget because he had estimated revenue would amount only to $37.5 billion.

After screening the recommendations of the subcommittees and the "central" committee, the full Appropriations Committee decided upon an overall figure of $31,371,380,164. This was $1,582,550,504 below the estimates. It then rolled the various appropriations into one bundle and introduced the whole in the House March 21 as the first omnibus money bill in modern history. It was enormous in size, having 425 pages. It received the bill number of HR 7786. The report ran to another 320 pages.

A breakdown of the Committee's recommendations follows:

General Provisions

Language was written in to require a more careful apportionment of appropriated funds to keep government spending within ceiling fixed by Congress in its money bills. Designed to lessen or prevent the need for deficiency appropriations, the provision specifically exempted from any restriction expenditures for interest on the public debt, payment of claims, judgments and refunds, items of a confidential nature, private relief acts and contingent expenses of the House and Senate.

The different methods provided for transfer of appropriated funds from one agency to another were abolished in favor of transfer by check only, and a ban was written in against transfer of funds that would otherwise revert to the Treasury.

Government employees were required to take annual leave on a yearly basis as they earned it.

Summary dismissal powers were granted for the first time to the Secretary of Commerce and renewed for the Secretary of State.

Report

Here is how some of the individual departments and agencies fared, and what the 320-page Committee report had to say about them.

Defense Department

The largest single portion of the budget — $13,911,127,300 — went to the Defense Department. The sum included $12,825,342,300 in cash and $1,085,785,000 in new contract authority. This was $203,332,700 less than the amount requested by the President, but the cuts were confined almost entirely to administrative expenses, auxiliary services and allowances for price declines. The Committee accused President Truman of "thwarting a major policy of Congress" by ordering the Defense Secretary to place in reserve money provided by Congress last year for increasing the size of the Air Force from 48 to 58 groups. This amounted to an "item veto", the Committee charged. In support of the military funds, the Committee asserted the country "cannot safely make further reductions in the military program."

Veterans Administration

An outlay of $5,801,782,795 was recommended for the VA in fiscal 1951, representing a decrease of $205,832,205 under the budget request. The sum was $528,736,205 below the 1950 appropriations. The Committee urged the VA to "take early steps to correct (the) unsatisfactory situation" of its vast insurance program by consolidating insurance records in one office.

Atomic Energy Commission

The Committee said more accurate estimates of construction costs should be provided. The bill contained $647,820,000 for the 1951 fiscal program and $300,150,000 in contract authorization. This represented a $61,980,000 cut in cash and $33,350,000 contract reduction.

Commerce Department

The special provision giving the Secretary of Commerce power to fire at will any employee "whenever he shall deem such termination necessary or advisable in the interests of the United States" grew out of heated sessions of the Commerce Appropriations Subcommittee's hearings. Subcommittee Chairman John J. Rooney (D N.Y.) charged that the Department was "honeycombed" with Communists. Department officials had responded that a group of employees cleared of disloyalty charges had remained on the payroll, even though they were considered "bad security risks", because authority was lacking to fire them.

Post Office Department

The Committee set $401,500,000 as the legal maximum which the Post Office Department could get from the Treasury for operating expenses in fiscal 1951. This was done in anticipation of enactment of HR 2945, a bill to increase postal rates, the Committee said. (See page 427.) The remainder of estimated postal expenditures of $2,235,607,000 would be made up from postal revenues amounting to $1,681,000,000.

Army Department
Civil Functions

A total of $600,945,000 was recommended for the Corps of Engineers rivers and harbors and flood control activities. This represented a budget cut of $197,537,000, or 25 per cent, one of the largest cuts in the one-package appropriation legislation.,

Justice Department,
Federal Bureau of Investigation

The Committee recommended $144,230,000 for the Justice Department, decreasing the budget estimate $3,195,800. The full amount requested for the Federal Bureau of Investigation—$57,400,000 — was voted, however. The funds were to provide for 700 new employees, of whom 325 would be agents. A $4,000-a-year increase in the present $16,000-a-year salary of FBI Director J. Edgar Hoover was also stipulated.

State Department

Reductions in the percentage of financial support the United States was giving international organizations was urged by the Committee, which approved an appropriation of $217,651,297 to run the State Department. A $25 million item for the International Refugee Organization was granted "with the explicit understanding that it is to complete the program."

Agriculture Department

An appropriation of $764,032,701 was voted the Agriculture Department, $42,245,745 below the budget requests. It reduced by $199,990,000 the revolving fund for resubscriptions to capital stock of the Federal Farm Mortgage Corp. The National School Lunch Program was given the full budget estimate of $83,500,000. The Rural Electrification Administration got $375,000,000 in loan authorization, $25,000,000 of which was earmarked for the rural telephone program. This was $75,000,000 below the budget estimate.

Interior Department

The amount of $621,634,130 was recommended for the Interior Dept. This was $47,617,375 under the budget. The Bureau of Reclamation got $325,108,000 for its activities, which include construction and rehabilitation of authorized reclamation projects. The Bureau of Indian Affairs got $76,293,000, some $16 million more than it got in 1949, but about $10 million less than was requested in the 1951 budget.

U. S. Maritime Commission

A cash appropriation of $96,128,720 was allowed the U. S. Maritime Commission, which also got $63,000,000 in contract authorization. The President had asked $164,730,000 and $70,000,000 respectively. The Committee was critical of the Commission's operating-differential subsidy request, pointing out that $93,380,000 had been asked, but that the use of only $50,406,843 had been proposed. The Committee granted $26,450,000 in new funds for subsidies, but reappropriated enough unused 1949 and 1950 funds to make a total of $81,659,157 for this purpose.

Other Reports

Rep. John Taber (R N.Y.), ranking Republican member of the House Appropriations Committee, issued a statement on HR 7786, in which he maintained the bill's money total should be cut another $1 billion or more. "Our people are being taxed beyond endurance," he declared, "and we are headed for uncontrolled inflation and bankruptcy unless a brake is put to unnecessary spending."

The House Republican Policy Committee, moving in to kill some of the money in the big measure, met March 28 and afterwards disclosed that members were preparing to seek an across-the-board cut of 20 per cent in federal personnel as one way of achieving government economies.

Rep. Taber (R N.Y.) said the cut, if it were proposed, would be offered as a ban on the refilling of government vacancies. He said such a policy would save from $1.25 to $1.5 billion a year in fiscal 1951 and reduce government employment by 20 per cent. He conceded some exemption would have to be written into the motion to permit filling of supervisory posts by promotion and to remove top policy-making positions from the ban. In addition, he said some special types of activities of the Veterans Administration and a limited number of other agencies, as well as all military personnel, might be relieved of the restriction.

Full-scale general debate on the omnibus measure opened in the House April 3, but holiday-minded Congressmen by advance agreement took no vote before they recessed April 6 for a 12-day Easter vacation.

At the outset it was decided not to limit general debate on the bill. But when the membership recessed for the Easter holiday, there were no further requests for speaking time and the talk was brought to an end by unanimous consent. The next step, which was not taken until the House returned from its vacation April 18, was a reading of the bill for amendments. This, as it turned out, consumed a total of three weeks' time.

Chairman Clarence Cannon (D Mo.), of the Appropriations Committee, opened debate on the measure. He described it as a "war budget" and warned against any cuts or changes.

"You can't economize at the expense of national safety," he argued. Rep. George H. Mahon (D Tex.), chairman of the Military Appropriations Subcommittee, contended that the Committee's bill offered exactly the right spending figure, about $29 billion.

But Chairman Carl Vinson (D Ga.), of the House Armed Services Committee, opened a drive April 4 for additional defense outlays totaling $583,289,211. He said this was needed for more warplanes to meet the threat of what he predicted would be another "carefully-timed Pearl Harbor." Vinson said the Air Force would get $200 million of the newly-requested money for new planes, and the Navy would get the rest, or $383,289,211.

Eisenhower Testimony

The Vinson drive for more funds coincided with an appearance of Gen. Dwight Eisenhower, Columbia University president, before the Senate Appropriations Committee which was then engaged in holding preliminary hearings on the omnibus military funds, even though the House had not taken final action on them. Eisenhower registered objection to the defense funds recommended by the House Appropriations Committee, on the grounds that the money was not sufficient to meet Alaskan, air force and submarine defense needs. He recommended an additional $500 million for these purposes.

But Rep. Mahon (D Tex.), on the House floor, urged resistance to the Vinson-Eisenhower efforts to increase defense appropriations. He said "our enemies want us to spend ourselves into defeat" and argued that about this time every year when military appropriations are before Congress, "we begin to hear of flying saucers . . . Enemy submarines flit to and fro in the Pacific . . . and even our friends say Russia is planning another Pearl Harbor."

Arguments, pro and con, went on for four days, until April 12, but there was little enthusiasm on either side and frequently the House floor was almost bare of members.

Reading For Amendments

The House returned from its Easter vacation April 18 and took up the pending HR 7786 in Committee of the Whole, reading the bill by chapter for amendments. The bill had 11 chapters, one for each of the agencies and departments previously handled in separate measures.

Since roll-call votes are not taken in the Committee of the Whole, the House spent the next weeks making only tentative decisions. The reading of each chapter was slow and there were many amendments. Each accepted amendment was subject to later ratification by roll call, though defeated proposals were not eligible for any more consideration. However, few amendments, of those originally agreed to, were finally thrown out under this procedure.

The Republican drive to cut the bill got under way early and scored a small victory on April 19 when the House went on record in favor of a 10 per cent cut in the $12 million federal contribution toward expenses of the voteless District of Columbia. The cut was accepted by teller vote, 86 to 82.

A few minutes later, the House killed an amendment by Rep. Vito Marcantonio (ALP N.Y.) to prohibit racial segregation in any facilities operated by the D. of C. government. This vote, 67 to 21, also was by teller.

Rep. Abraham J. Multer (D N.Y.), also met defeat April 19 when he tried to get through an amendment to raise pay of House members by $7,500 a year. He was ruled out of order because the expenditure was not authorized by law.

The biggest victory for the economy bloc, in this tentative voting period, came April 20 when Rep. Taber (R N.Y.) won a point of order knocking out a $7 million contract authorization for the Institute of Inter-American Affairs to buy and hire passenger cars.

On another point of order, Rep. Marcantonio was sustained April 20 when he moved to strike out a rider, originally adopted in 1947, giving the Secretary of State absolute discretion to discharge employees. He contended it was legislation in an appropriation bill which is forbidden. Marcantonio April 21 succeeded in winning another point of order knocking out the same dismissal powers which had been recommended for the Commerce Secretary.

The little success the economy bloc had had up to this point in reducing the bill's money was outbalanced April 25 when the House adopted by teller vote, 125 to 66, an amendment by Rep. Albert Gore (D Tenn.) granting $75 million in additional contract authority for the federal-state hospital construction program administered by the Federal Security Agency. The Committee had recommended $75 million, against a budget estimate of $150 million.

A Republican, Frank Keefe (Wis.), wanted to go even further and add $25 million in cash to the $100 million in the bill for the hospital projects and $1,450,000 to the $1,375,000 allowed for administration of the program. But he lost the first test on a voice vote, and the second on a teller vote of 67 to 68.

Committee Recommends New Money

In a surprise move, the House Appropriations Committee April 26 decided to recommend approval of an amendment adding $350 million to the bill's defense funds. The move came as a surprise because Chairman Cannon and Mahon, in charge of military appropriations, originally were opposed to the increase.

On May 9, the House received the Appropriations Committee's amendment providing the new defense money. But by this time, the total had grown, though it still was less than the Vinson-Eisenhower requests. The amendment then was for $385,360,000 to pay for aircraft procurement, warship modernization and new anti-tank weapons. The amendment was approved the same day without opposition.

It was the last tentative vote taken on HR 7786. The next step was roll-call ratification, where demanded, of amendments and then on final passage of the measure. This came May 10.

Up to this point, the Republican-sparked economy drive had lost far more ground than it had gained. Every effort to make significant cuts in the bill had been rejected. The net effect of the economy drive had been a reduction of $14,095,496. But an addition of $463 million far outweighed these cuts.

The following is an outline of amendments acted on in the tentative-voting stage:

Taber (R N.Y.) — Cut $2 million from administrative funds for Reconstruction Finance Corp. April 24, teller vote, 65 to 69.

Frank B. Keefe (R Wis.) — Add $25 million in cash to hospital construction program. April 25, voice vote.

Keefe (R Wis.) — Add $1,450,000 to funds for administrative expenses of hospital program. April 25, teller vote, 67 to 68.

Kenneth B. Keating (R N.Y.) — Cut by 25 percent the $297,467,000 provided for construction and rehabilitation of authorized reclamation projects. May 4, division vote, 51 to 86.

Final Action

With general debate and tentative action on amendments completed, the bill came up for passage May 10.

But before the day was over, a rally of economy forces succeeded in chopping $600 million, horizontally, from non-defense funds in the bill and in ordering a compulsory personnel reduction, for an estimated saving of $400 million.

The first decisive economy test, as final action approached, came on a proposal by Rep. Taber (R N.Y.) that had the backing of the House Republican Policy Committee. It called for a flat $600 million cut in all but military and other defense funds. It was adopted, on a roll-call vote, 274 to 112. Taber recruited Democratic support when the vote came by the parliamentary tactic of offering his proposal as an amendment to a proposal by Rep. Albert Thomas (D Tex.), who wanted a $500 million reduction.

Adoption of what then became the Taber-Thomas rider was preceded by defeat of a much milder substitute offered by Rep. Cannon. His called for a five percent reduction in administrative expenses provided in the bill and was rejected by a teller vote, 194 to 141.

The plan for compulsory personnel reductions was adopted, 201 to 185. Its sponsor was Rep. Ben F. Jensen (R Iowa), and it also had the backing of the GOP Policy Committee. It sought to prevent the filling of more than 10 percent of the government vacancies occurring during fiscal 1951 except by promotion or transfer. Jensen estimated this would trim the pay roll by as many as 500,000 employees.

Restored to the bill were two anti-Communist riders previously eliminated on points of order raised by Marcantonio. They permitted the Secretaries of State and Commerce, at their discretion, to dismiss any employee if it were deemed "in the interests of the United States." The House was enabled to take this action after it adopted a resolution

Final Approval

The vote May 10 for final passage of HR 7786 was 362 to 21. A total of 221 Democrats joined 141 Republicans to put the bill across, while 21 Democrats and 17 Republicans joined in opposing it.

As it went to the Senate, the bill contained $29,152,713,664 in cash, $2,147,626,000 in contract authority and $520,350,000 in borrowing power. The general provisions of the bill were the same, but the Taber-Thomas and the Jensen riders had been added. (For breakdown of House appropriations, see charts beginning Page 105.)

In the final voting, a separate vote was demanded on a number of previous decisions. Most of these decisions were ratified, though not all. When an amendment, which received tentative approval by the Committee of the Whole, did not receive a separate vote or ratification in the House itself, the tentative approval became a permanent endorsement.

The following were the amendments, previously accepted by tentative Committee of the Whole balloting, which drew separate, final voting in the House itself: (The following also includes amendments which were offered and acted upon for the first time during this final period.)

AMENDMENTS ACCEPTED

Taber (R N.Y.) — Previously-adopted amendment reducing District of Columbia funds by $1,200,000, re-adopted on division vote, 179 to 104.

Case (R S.D.) — Previously accepted amendment reducing PHA funds by $2,950,000, re-adopted on a roll-call vote, 222 to 163.

Albert Thomas (D Tex.) and Taber (R N.Y.) — Thomas amendment as amended by Taber, reducing non-military expenses by $600 million. Roll-call, 274 to 112.

Jensen (R Iowa) — Prohibit filling of more than 10 percent of Federal government job vacancies in fiscal 1951. Roll-call, 201 to 185.

John J. Rooney (R N.Y.) — Grant summary powers to dismiss employees if "in interest of United States" to Secretaries of State and Commerce. Voice.

AMENDMENTS REJECTED

Boggs (D La.) — Previously-accepted amendment increasing by $2,525,340 amount provided for maritime training purposes. Teller vote, 137 to 145.

Cannon (D Mo.) — Require impounding of five per cent of bill's administrative funds except where the full amount was found essential. Teller vote, 141 to 194.

SENATE

Hearings

Subcommittees of the Senate Appropriations Committee began their hearings on HR 7786 long before the House had completed action on the omnibus funds measure. These hearings produced much the same testimony as that developed by the House Appropriations Committee, but ultimately they were less lengthy than the House hearings. Where the latter consumed 45 volumes of print, the Senate hearings were covered in 16 volumes.

As in the House, most witnesses were government functionaries who appeared in support of budget estimates for their various agencies and departments.

When the House completed its action, these officials changed the line of their testimony somewhat. They sought to persuade the Senate to leave the House figures intact or revise them upward.

Witnesses from outside the government who appeared were in virtually every case witnesses who had previously testified before the House subcommittees. (For the organizations and groups represented by spokesmen at the House hearings, see page 115.)

Eisenhower Testimony

One witness not heard at the House hearings but who testified before the Senate Appropriations Committee was Gen. Dwight Eisenhower, wartime military leader and later president of Columbia University. He appeared March 29 before the full Committee to protest the defense allotment recommended a few days before by the House Appropriations Committee.

Eisenhower called this appropriation deficient and said it ought to be increased by at least $500 million. Subsequently, he outlined his complaints and suggestions in a letter addressed to Sen. Elmer Thomas (D Okla.), chairman of the Armed Services Appropriations Subcommittee. Eisenhower recommended using more money to strengthen Alaskan defenses, to build up a 48-group, first-line air force and to construct a special, anti-submarine force.

The immediate response to Eisenhower's testimony came, not in the Senate, but in the House which at the time was preparing to begin debate on the big money bill. The net result was that the House added $385,360,000 to the $13.9 billion originally recommended for defense, and the Senate Committee, when HR 7786 came to it, gave the new total its full endorsement. (See page 118.)

Report

The Senate Appropriations Committee reported its version of HR 7786 to the chamber floor on July 8. The bill then carried $36,919,658,672 in combined cash, contract authority and lending power. This included funds for foreign economic and military aid not considered by the House, because legislation authorizing the expenditures had not at the time been enacted.

Before the Committee had been budget estimates totaling $38,452,358,148, including foreign aid requests.

The total the Committee recommended was $1,532,699,476 below these estimates, but it was $5,098,969,008 more than the sum approved by the House, exclusive of the Thomas-Taber and Jensen riders.

Foreign aid in the bill was $4,522,158,729, of which $1,678,023,729 was for Atlantic Pact nations under the Military Assistance Program.

These additions fattened the Senate's version of the House bill to 478 pages. A 303-page report accompanied it.

Before sending the catch-all measure to the floor, the Committee had refused to endorse the House-approved Taber-Thomas and Jensen amendments. It went even further and turned down an economy substitute sponsored by Styles Bridges (R N.H.) requiring a $400 million trimming job on such items as personnel funds, travel allowances and rents. The vote on the Bridges proposal was 9 to 12.

The vote against the Thomas-Taber amendment was 18 to 3, while the Jensen proposal was thrown out by the wider margin of 18 to 2.

The principal test, that on the Bridges proposal, was recorded as follows: For the provision — Republican Sens. Bridges, Chan Gurney (S.D.), Homer Ferguson (Mich.), Kenneth S. Wherry (Neb.), Guy Cordon (Ore.), William F. Knowland (Calif.), and Leverett Saltonstall (Mass.), and Democrats John L. McClellan (Ark.), and A. Willis Robertson (Va.). Against the provision — Democrats Kenneth McKellar (Tenn.), Carl Hayden (Ariz.), Elmer Thomas (Okla.), Richard B. Russell (Ga.), Joseph C. O'Mahoney (Wyo.), Pat McCarran (Nev.), Dennis Chavez (N.M.), Burnet R. Maybank (S.C.), Allen J. Ellender (La.), Lister Hill (Ala.), Harley M. Kilgore (W. Va.), and Republican Milton R. Young (N.D.). Voting for retention of the Taber-Thomas provisions were Sens. Bridges, Wherry and Ferguson. Sens. Wherry and Ferguson also voted for the Jensen rider.

General Provisions

After the Committee tossed out the Taber-Thomas and Jensen economy riders, it left HR 7786's general provisions essentially as they had been written by the House, with only minor changes. A recapitulation follows:

The antideficiency appropriation language was left as the House had written it, but a stronger clause was also inserted exempting contingent expenses of the House and Senate from specified restrictions against expenditures beyond the amount fixed by Congress.

The simplified appropriations transfer procedure was left exactly as the House wrote it, requiring all future transfers of funds from one agency to another to be by check, and prohibiting the transfer of unused funds in any way to prevent their reversion to the Treasury.

Government employees were required to take annual leave each year as it is earned, instead of allowing it to accumulate for future use.

Summary dismissal powers were granted to the Secretary of Commerce and these powers were renewed for the Secretary of State.

In some important phases, the Senate Committee's version of the bill differed from the House's. These were the major differences:

State Department

The informational and educational program of the State Department, including the Voice of America, was cut $1,300,000 below the House-approved figure of $34,000,000. The President had asked for $36,645,000. The $7 million in contract authorization which the House had cut out of the funds for the Inter-American Affairs Institute was completely restored.

Foreign Aid

The $2,657,700,000 asked for the Economic Cooperation Administration was cut $265,770,000. But the Committee pointed out that 1950 carryover funds for the ECA amounted to $276,761,473, and this, added to the recommended appropriation, gave the agency $2,668,691,473 for fiscal 1951. A provision also was inserted limiting ECA to $25,000 for any further dismantling of German plants for war reparations.

President Truman's request for $26,900,000 to provide technical assistance to underdeveloped areas under his Point Four program (See page 204) was reduced to $10 million. The Committee also wrote into the bill prohibitions against duplication of Point Four activities by different federal agencies and against use of any of the money for construction projects.

A $10 million reduction in the $100 million asked for Korea was made without explanation.

The full $1,678,023,729 requested for MAP nations was allowed.

Defense Department

The Committee added $383,879,521 to the sum approved by the House. Of the extra money, $298,190,000 was earmarked for military construction and public works projects not considered by the lower chamber.

Post Office Department

The House-set postal deficiency ceiling of $401,500,000 was deleted by the Committee. It pointed out that the ceiling had been set in anticipation of enactment of legislation (HR 2945) to increase postal rates by about $125 million yearly and in expectance of estimated postal revenues of $1,681,000,000. But, said the Committee, the ceiling was impractical because "it is not possible to definitely determine in advance the total postal revenues available for the year." A further cut of $28,193,000, however, was sustained in the total appropriation.

Army Civil Functions

The Committee wrote in an additional $132,401,000 over the House-approved figure for rivers and harbors and flood control projects. A total of $731,546,000 was allowed for these purposes.

Floor Action

The Senate took up HR 7786 on July 11 and spent the next four weeks debating and voting on amendments. The House also had spent four weeks on the legislation.

There were scores of attempts to amend the bill, both upward and downward, money-wise. Ultimately both the economy moves and the attempts to fatten funds were successful.

Before the measure left the Senate, enough money had been added to increase the total to $37,093,322,231 in cash, contract authority and loan funds. The Committee had sent a $36,919,658,672 measure to the floor.

Byrd-Bridges Rider

But from the floor an economy rider was written into the measure to require a 10 per cent cut in all but postal, military and foreign economic aid funds. The amount of the cut was variously estimated to total from $500 million to $1,500 million, making it difficult to estimate just how much had been sliced off the multi-billion-dollar appropriation.

Leading sponsors of this economy drive were Sens. Harry Flood Byrd (D Va.) and Styles Bridges (R N. H.). They were supported by the following 33 other senators:

Democratic Senators John L. McClellan (Ark.), Spessard Holland (Fla.), Clyde M. Hoey (N. C.) and A. Willis Robertson (Va.).

Republican Senators William F. Knowland (Calif.), Eugene D. Millikin (Colo.), John J. Williams (Del.), Henry C. Dworshak (Idaho), Homer Capehart (Ind.), William Jenner (Ind.), Bourke C. Hickenlooper (Iowa), Harry Darby (Kan.), Andrew Schoeppel (Kan.), Owen Brewster (Maine), Leverett Saltonstall (Mass.), Homer Ferguson (Mich.), Edward Thye (Minn.), James Kem (Mo.), Zales Ecton (Mont.), Hugh Butler (Neb.), Kenneth Wherry (Neb.), George Malone (Nev.), Robert C. Hendrickson (N. J.), H. Alexander Smith (N. J.), Irving Ives (N. Y.), John Bricker (Ohio), Robert A. Taft (Ohio), Guy Cordon (Ore.), Edward Martin (Pa.), Chan Gurney (S. D.), Karl Mundt (S. D.), Arthur V. Watkins (Utah), and Joseph McCarthy (Wis.).

The vote for adoption of this economy amendment on Aug. 3 was 55 to 31. Byrd and Bridges hadn't wanted to exclude the foreign economic funds from the scope of their amendment, but the exemption was voted on the floor, 45 to 40, at the urging of H. Alexander Smith (R N. J.) with support of Majority Leader Scott W. Lucas (D Ill.).

Unsuccessful Move

Sen. Paul H. Douglas (D Ill.) led another, but unsuccessful, economy move. He sought to trim about $1 billion in funds from non-military appropriations, but he lost every attempt he made to reduce any part of the bill. Once he went to the extreme of asking a $1.00 cut in each of a series of rivers, harbors and flood control projects. This proposal was shouted down.

Major addition to the bill made from the floor was an increase in Economic Cooperation (Marshall Plan) Administration funds from $2,391,930,000 to $2,450,000,000. It was adopted July 31 by voice vote. But the Senate decided also, in another voice action, to add a warning to recipient nations that those refusing to help the United States support the United Nations action in Korea might, at the President's discretion, lose aid altogether.

Loan To Spain

Another important provision was for a $100 million loan to Spain, approved Aug. 1.

Sen. Pat McCarran (D Nev.) led the move to include this loan in the bill. The Nevadan first wanted an outright grant to Spain from ECA funds, but he finally agreed to a compromise worked out by the Administration-minded team of Sens. Joseph C. O'Mahoney (D Wyo.), Brien McMahon (D Conn.), Carl Hayden (D Ariz.) and Francis J. Myers (D Pa.). The compromise made the loan a public debt transaction. The ECA was directed to issue new notes to the Treasury, and hand the funds thus raised to the Export-Import Bank. The Bank in turn was given the responsibility of delivering the money to Spain. The Senate approved the McCarran proposal, as thus amended, 65 to 15.

Harley W. Kilgore (D W.Va.) offered a motion to reconsider the approval of the Spanish loan but he was turned down, 65 to 15, the same vote, numerically, by which the Senate had endorsed the loan.

Action on Amendments

From a mechanical point of view, the Senate's rules permitted it to handle the omnibus bill in the same manner followed by the House. But the upper chamber varied the House procedure in some details, though generally adhering to it.

Instead of holding general debate on the bill as a whole as the House had, the Senate debated each chapter as it came to it, amended it and then went on to the next. The debate was usually confined to the amendments themselves and, as it turned out, general aspects of the measure drew little discussion.

Under its rules, the Senate might have returned to any amendment, once it was adopted, and registered a new decision on it. However, the Senate voted on all its amendments only once, and completed each action the first time.

In the early amending stages, the voting was relatively uncomplicated and evoked few parliamentary tangles. But in the final few days, so many amendments were tossed into the hopper, nearly every one of which caused controversy, that the action many times became caught up in parliamentary backing and filling.

For instance, on Aug. 3, the Senate got into complications when it took up the Smith (R N.J.) amendment exempting foreign aid funds from the pending Byrd-Bridges 10 per cent across-the-board slash. The Smith amendment was multi-pronged, in that it sought exemption for all major facets of the foreign aid program. A separate vote was demanded on eacn desired exemption.

The first vote, 45 to 40, exempted ECA. Then exemption of the International Children's Welfare Work was rejected on division. Matthew M. Neely (D W.Va.) moved to reconsider this division vote but Wherry first sought to table the Neely Motion. Wherry was defeated, 42 to 42. Neely's reconsideration motion was then agreed to, 43 to 42, and on another vote, 44 to 41, the Senate agreed the proposed across-the-board cut would not affect the children's fund. Exemption of Point Four funds from the cut was then rejected, 39 to 46.

Parliamentary Snarls

Another time the same day, Sen. James E. Murray (D Mont.) asked the Senate to return to the Labor Department — Federal Security Agency chapter of the money bill—a chapter which already had been completed at the time — and write in an amendment increasing by $3,457,240 the FSA funds for vocational training. This was accepted by division.

But Appropriations Committee Chairman Kenneth McKellar

(D Tenn.) was opposed to the Murray amendment. Unable to ward off its adoption, McKellar later asked the Senate to reconsider the vote by which it had approved the additional money.

Interceding at this point, Sen. Hubert H. Humphrey (D Minn.), a supporter of the Murray amendment, moved to lay on the table the McKellar reconsideration motion. Humphrey's motion was rejected on a roll-call, 38 to 39. After that, the Senate returned to the McKellar motion, but ended up by turning it down too, on a roll-call vote of 24 to 53.

Committee Meets Again

Meantime, the Senate Appropriations Committee had done an about-face July 17 and voted, 13 to 3, to restore the $16,900,000 cut it previously had made in funds for the Administration's Point Four Program. President Truman, a few days earlier, had called Committee members to a White House conference about the matter and it was believed this led to the Committee's decision to reverse itself.

Besides restoring the cut, the Committee went on to remove a restriction on the program and modify another, that had been opposed by the President. These were:

1. A provision limiting administrative expenses of the program to 10 per cent of total money approved.

2. A ban on use of any of the funds for project construction. This was modified to permit use of nominal sums for "demonstration or institutional purpose."

Senate Republican Leader Kenneth S. Wherry (Neb.) was joined by Sens. Homer Ferguson (R Mich.) and Milton R. Young (R N.D.) in opposing the restoration. But Chairman McKellar asked the Senate to agree to the new change July 31, and this the Senate did on a voice vote.

Final Approval

HR 7786 finally emerged Aug. 4 from its long trip through the Senate. Though dozens of roll calls had been taken on passage of amendments, the Senate stamped its last endorsement on the measure by a simple voice vote.

As approved by the Senate, HR 7786 contained $34,258,362,231 in cash, $2,184,610,000 in contract authorization and $650,350,000 in borrowing authority. The latter included the Spanish loan.

For an item-by-item account of appropriations approved by the Senate, see charts beginning Page 105.

General provisions of the bill as it passed were the same as those approved by the Committee, with these additions:

The antideficiency language was expanded by inclusion of a new clause exempting the government's mail subsidy payments from restrictions against expenditures in excess of those appropriated by Congress.

The Byrd-Bridges across-the-board cut of 10 per cent in specified appropriations was included.

The McClellan amendment authorizing the President, in his discretion, to halt ECA aid to any recipient nation which failed to help the United States in its support of the United Nations action in Korea was also included.

The Hickenlooper provision halting ECA aid to any nation whose dependencies discriminate against U. S. business in violation of trade treaties was another addition.

CONFERENCE

The bulky — and considerably overdue — omnibus appropriations bill, carrying $36,703,600,425 was reported by a joint House-Senate conference committee Aug. 24, after lengthy, and often stormy, study.

Like the House and Senate Appropriations Committees, the conference committee had been divided into subcommittees, each corresponding exactly to the Appropriations subcommittees. Each of the 65 members of these two Committees served on at least one—and often several—conference subcommittees.

There was only one point on which the conferees could not reach agreement. That was the question of continuing the life of the Joint "Watchdog" Committee on Foreign Economic Cooperation. Originally, it was supposed to expire June 30, 1950. The House members wanted this to stand, but the Senate conferees insisted on retaining a $130,000 item which had been inserted in the upper chamber to keep the "Watchdog" agency going. So they decided to let the matter be determined on the chamber floors.

Compromise Terms

Most important among terms of the compromise were these:

1. The Spanish loan was reduced to $62.5 million.

2. The so-called economy amendments adopted in different forms by the House and Senate were reconciled in favor of a new rider requiring the Bureau of the Budget to make an overall reduction of $550 million in such a way as not to impair national defense.

3. The total $2,450,000,000 voted ECA was cut by $200 million.

4. The controversial rivers, harbors and flood control section was cut from the $763,464,620 approved by the Senate to $686,000,000, with the added proviso that no construction or planning of any new project could be undertaken "unless certified by the President as necessary to the war effort."

5. Point Four funds were cut from the $26.9 million voted by the Senate to $15 million.

For an item-by-item account of conference-approved appropriations, see tables beginning page 105.

General Provisions

The antideficiency provision, laying down restrictions against expenditures for government programs in excess of the amounts appropriated by Congress, was retained in full. The Senate-inserted exemption of mail subsidies from the antideficiency restrictions were eliminated. Written in its stead was an exemption of the government's farm price support program. Both the House and Senate had agreed upon, and therefore the conference retained, exemption from any restrictions for these expenditures: interest on the public debt, payment of claims, judgments and refunds, items of a confidential nature, private relief acts and contingent expenses of the House and Senate.

The Senate-inserted McClellan and Hickenlooper amendments—the first, halting ECA aid to any nation failing to support the UN action in Korea, and the second, halting ECA aid to any country whose dependencies violate trade treaties with the United States—were also carried in the conference report.

The appropriations transfer procedure, the annual leave restriction and the dismissal powers sections were left intact as the House originally wrote them, since the Senate made no changes.

The $550 million cut on items not affecting national defense was substituted for the Byrd-Bridges and Taber-Thomas riders of the Senate and House, respectively.

McKellar-Cannon Fight

Efforts of the conferees to settle differences over the controversial rivers and harbors section of the bill evoked a sharp, gavel-brandishing clash between Sen. Kenneth McKellar (D Tenn.), 81, and Rep. Clarence Cannon (D Mo.), 71, chairmen respectively of the Senate and House Appropriations Committees. The two in past years had argued frequently about federal spending.

According to the account of what went on in the closed-door conference, McKellar referred to Cannon by a long string of uncomplimentary terms, including "blind", "stupid", and "pig-headed". Stung by the epithets, Cannon sprang from the chair, shouted that he had "taken all I'm going to" and rushed around the big committee table with the apparent purpose of grappling with McKellar. McKellar was reported to have grabbed his gavel and stood up to swing. But McKellar and Cannon were restrained before they came to physical violence and both were finally escorted from the room.

House Tentatively Approves

The House approved the compromise report, with the exception of the "Watchdog" Committee provision, on Aug. 25. It voted by voice to insist on dissolution of the disputed group by Aug. 31, 1950.

Before sending the conference report on to the Senate, it also reversed once more the cut made by the conferees in Point Four funds. Rep. J. Vaughan Gary (D Va.) appealed to the House to restore the full $26.9 million the President wanted and the Senate had voted for the program. He said a "mistake" had been made and asked the House to return to the Senate-approved figure. This the House did by voice vote.

Senate Amends, Approves

The Senate Aug. 28 endorsed the compromise version of HR 7786, but first made some changes in the House's "Watchdog" Committee provision. It agreed to terminate the Joint Committee Aug. 31, 1950, as the House wanted, but it earmarked $110,000 for use of a Senate "Watchdog" Committee to take the place of the former group. Chairman McKellar (D Tenn.) of the Appropriations Committee offered the Senate amendment to the House amendment and it was approved by voice vote.

The House's decision to restore the conferees' Point Four cut was approved without comment.

Final Approval, Comment

Later the same day the House approved the Senate amendment by voice vote. This action, climaxing eight months of work on the measure, sent HR 7786 on to the White House for President Truman's signature.

The two men primarily responsible for the 1950 trial run of the omnibus appropriations procedure praised this method of financing the government as HR 7786 went to the Chief Executive for final action.

Chairman Cannon (D Mo.), of the House Appropriations Committee said Aug. 25: "With all appropriations in one bill we are in a position to readjust plans and expenditures to meet the changed conditions thrust upon us by war." He said the procedure had completely justified itself in its first trial year.

Sen. Byrd (D Va.) said Aug. 28: "At this date last year less than half the 1950 appropriations had been enacted."

(For further reaction to the omnibus idea, see page 128)

Law Enacted

President Truman on Sept. 6 signed HR 7786 and it became Public Law 759, the General Appropriations Act of 1951.

In putting his signature to the bill, Mr. Truman issued a statement expressing his feeling that Congress had "passed the buck" in requiring the executive branch (i.e. the Bureau of the Budget, which is an arm of the President's office) to make the mandatory across-the-board reduction which legislators themselves had been unwilling to spell out.

But the President said the reductions would be made and that, if possible, they would be even greater "than the amount specified in the bill." He said a review was even then going forward, to determine agency programs which contribute the least to defense objectives.

Spanish Loan Hit

As for the "directive" on the Spanish loan, Mr. Truman dismissed it as unconstitutional.

He said a "directive" would be without constitutional grounds and he therefore regarded the loan provision merely as an "authorization". And, he contended, "authority already is in existence under which loans to Spain may be made." He also stated:

"Spain is not and has not been, foreclosed from borrowing money from this government. Money will be loaned to Spain whenever mutually advantageous arrangements can be made with respect to security, terms of repayment, purposes for which the money is to be spent and other appropriate factors, and whenever such loans will serve the interests of the United States in the conduct of foreign relations."

The President's comment that Spain was not "foreclosed" from borrowing money was underscored Nov. 15 when the Economic Cooperation Administration cited P. L. 759 and announced that Spain could forthwith make application to the Export-Import Bank for dollars.

Lobby Stands

Numerous pressure groups did not appear before either the House or Senate Appropriations Committees, but they nevertheless made their stands on government finances known to Congress.

For Cuts

Among national and regional groups urging governmental economy and cuts in federal expenditures proposed in HR 7786 were these, whose views were printed in the Congressional Record.

American National Live Stock Association

Western States Meat Packing Association Inc.

Home Owners and Taxpayers Association

Kiwanis International

Republican Conference National Debt Policy Committee, whose 1939 "prophecy" of the results of "New Deal spending" was put into the Record March 30, 1950, by Rep. Daniel A. Reed (R N.Y.).

Strong support for government economy came from these groups, who expressed their views in communications to Congressmen:

Local Cartage National Conference —"Government expenses in all forms are too great".

National Association of Retail Grocers — called for reduction of "not less than $5 billion" in next year's federal spending.

Northeastern Retail Lumbermen's Association

National Small Business Men's Association

National Association of Manufacturers — called for a $33.6 billion federal budget, allowing for possible adjustments in some categories.

Committee for Constitutional Government

National Association of Lumber Manufacturers

Chamber of Commerce of the U. S.

Council of State Chambers of Commerce

American Farm Bureau Federation

The Economy Argument

Here were comments of advocates of reduction in federal spending.

Chamber of Commerce appealed to Representatives urging substantial curtailment of spending. A Board of Director's resolution said "retrenchment is the key to problems of lower taxes, reduced debt, and a stable fiscal system". It urged the abolishment of all activities no longer needed, decrease in the number of government employees, and "contraction of many existing commitments". It commended the single-measure type of appropriations legislation.

National Association of Manufacturers sent Congressmen a proposed budget program in a booklet headed "Why Deficit Spending?" "Deficit spending threatens to undermine the nation's economic strength, thus endangering the national well being and security," said NAM. Its $33.6 billion budget called for "stringent restriction" of public works, revision of programs for large-scale river basin development, highway and airport aids, and reclamation, a review of veterans' hospital construction program, reduction in federal employees, and elimination of duplication in federal services.

gether" commented, "The drive for economy which was supposed to have developed in the House hasn't and won't unless a whole lot more pressure than has yet been brought to bear is exerted on congressmen. The article signed by DeWitt Emery, founder of the organization, continued, "I can't for the life of me figure out what members of Congress can be thinking about in being willing to go along with the Administration on its deficit spending program. Nor can I understand the attitude of business men who sit back and do nothing, who aren't even willing to invest twenty minutes of their valuable time in writing a letter telling their congressmen and their senators that they want a balanced budget for fiscal '51."

American Farm Bureau Federation's "Washington Ringside" said, "The vast and sensitive grapevine that runs to Capitol Hill from every nook and cranny of the country is making Congress keenly aware of the American people's concern about the titanic national debt, a federal budget that stays out of balance —and taxes. Mr. and Mrs. John Q. Public are disturbed, it seems, and want something done about it." The Farm Bureau recommended a cut of upwards of $4 billion in the national budget, including about $25 million in the Department of Agriculture.

Letters from firms and individuals also told Congressmen national fiscal policies were wrong.

A West Virginian sent a printed message on his personal letterhead asking, "How long can it last!" Enclosed was a Wheeling Intelligencer editorial which ran with a photograph of a billboard. The billboard stated, "Every time the sun sets your federal government is $15 million deeper in debt." It was a billboard sponsored by the Anniston and Gadsden, Ala., Chambers of Commerce.

Many publications reaching Congressional desks also dealt repeatedly with the excess-spending theme.

Railway Progress carried Robert R. Young's article "The $300 Billion 'Hickonomy' — To achieve it we are beggaring our white collar class".

A booklet titled, "We Have the Inflation Habit — It Undermines Every Plan for Security" was circulated by Northwestern National Life Insurance Company.

Against Cuts

Here were some of the arguments of groups supporting appropriations for particular services. Their pleas went to Congressmen in letters, and printed literature. They considered the funds they urged essential to government operation, or economies in the long run.

American Home Economics Association decried fund cuts in the Bureau of Human Nutrition and Home Economics in letters to Congress.

National Milk Producers Federation worked for "an adequate appropriation" to enable Food and Drug Administration to enforce the new oleo law, according to the group's publication, News for Dairy Co-ops. "In view of the fact that an official Food and Drug estimate on the cost of a one-time check on all restaurants was set at $5 million, the $930,000 figure (recommended by the Budget Bureau) would appear to be but a drop in the bucket," commented the milk men. It sought the funds, although it "did not press for the restaurant inspection provision in the oleo law", said NMPF.

National Petroleum Council, through its chairman Walter S. Hallanan, former member of the Republican National Committee, appealed for the maintenance of the appropriation for the Oil and Gas Division of the Department of Interior, to maintain in the interest of national defense the "cooperative working arrangement" between the petroleum industry and the federal agency.

National Federation of Independent Business, Inc., repeatedly urged Congress to vote adequate appropriations to the Department of Justice and Federal Trade Commission as a means toward a vigorous anti-monopoly campaign to replace the "lip service" given to anti-trust laws. This, it said, would get at the "cancer that is destroying the Free Enterprise System and small business". The statement came in a telegram to the President calling for a small business program.

Military Spending

Navy League's "Know Your Navy" said in February the "marked effort to favor the other services over the Navy is certain to cause repercussions in Congress when the appropriations bills are debated."

In a May issue the League publication said the Navy, "long known as the 'Silent Service' . . . seems finally to have awakened to the fact that a well informed and friendly public is essential if the naval services are to maintain their rightful place in public esteem and share fairly in the allocation of defense funds. This year, as never before, Navy Department officials and officers in higher commands are stressing the importance of publicity . . ."

The proposed 1951 budget still does not allow Navy public relations funds equal to those of the other services, the Navy League monthly letter observed, "but Navy was at least the only service permitted an increase. With the added funds and the new interest, plus the help of Navy minded civilian organizations, some of the lost ground may be made up."

Referring to the Administration decision that the country take the "calculated risk of an inadequate defense" by maintaining a 48-group instead of a 70-group Air Force, Aircraft Industries Association President DeWitt C. Ramsey said the industry "aware of tax burdens . . . cannot oppose this decision.

"The industry can and will, however, continue to point out what the distinguished and impartial survey groups have found to be the minimum aviation requirements for our defense. We thus will remind the public of the calculated risks we as a nation are taking." The statement appeared as an editorial in the Association publication, Planes.

Merchant Marine

San Francisco Chamber of Commerce protested a limitation on operating differential subsidies for vessels in foreign trade, written into the House Appropriations bill. Letters and telegrams from the Chamber objecting to the provision went to Appropriations Committees and the California delegation.

Alumni Association of the United Merchant Marine Cadet Corps spokesman protested a proposed cut in allowances for cadet-midshipmen of the merchant marine academy, as a threat to the concept of maritime training.

Veterans Affairs

Disabled American Veterans, Department of Massachusetts, deplored reduction in facilities by the VA in Boston regional facilities and urged supplementary appropriations to allow retention of all employees needed to continue "present high type of service" to veterans in Massachusetts.

Rep. Charles A. Wolverton (R N.J.) reported strong resentment from south Jersey ex-servicemen to the discontinuance of medical services through the VA Camden office, due to a fund lack. Action of a mass meeting of veterans protesting the VA order was recounted by Wolverton in the Congressional Record.

National Association of State Approval Agencies wanted more appropriations for reimbursing states for approving and supervising firms training veterans on the job. The Association wanted the VA to request budgetary estimates from the states. Fund savings at expense of state supervision of the program "will not effect a real saving" and will damage the "prestige of veterans' education", it said.

Fellowship of Free Service called for an appropriation of $100,000 for planning "a limited demonstration" of a "self-sustaining joint community enterprise" that would help remove the causes of poverty, unemployment, and crime.

Medical Spending

National Committee for Mental Hygiene, Inc., asked Congress to appropriate for an expanded mental health program of research, training, and construction. It appealed both to desires to alleviate human misery and to achieve economy, in comparing the estimated $500 million cost in 1950 for care of mental patients with the $26 million mental health budget the Committee sought.

National Heart Committee sent Congress "cardiograms" urging support for increased appropriations for heart research.

Postal Cut

National League of District Postmasters' publication protested postal department budget slash, and said "Postmasters will carry the chief burden of these unwise budget reductions and therefore should tactfully advise their patrons the whole truth of the postal situation."

Objections to the "drastic curtailment of postal service", ordered as a consequence of the budget cut, came from Massachusetts branch of the United National Association of Post Office Clerks and National Association of Letter Carriers. Protests from both organizations to the one-delivery-a-day Post Office order were put into the Congressional Record by Rep. Edith Nourse Rogers (R Mass.).

Government Employees' Council (AFL) wrote Congressmen in opposition to the appropriations bill amendment "setting up by law the method and procedure as to how and when employees are compelled to take their annual leave". The council represents 22 unions and more than a half-million members.

Children's Bureau

American Parents Committee, Inc., asked for $2.25 million for the Children's Bureau — some $729,000 more than the Administration recommended.

Omnibus Views of Congressmen

Members of the Senate and House Appropriations Committees, in response to a written poll conducted in September, 1950, by Congressional Quarterly, voted almost two to one in favor of another try in 1951 of the omnibus type of money bill.

Twenty of the lawmakers cast ballots for the plan, while 13 opposed it.

The omnibus idea, under which an attempt is made to lump regular expenditures for all government agencies into one carry-all measure, was used in 1950 for the first time in more than 100 years. (For additional background, see Page 114.)

Had the Korean war not developed, the omnibus bill probably would have provided about 90 per cent of all Federal funds for fiscal 1951—its allocation was $36 billion plus. But unexpected war needs required financing in other, supplemental bills because these needs largely developed after the omnibus measure had been enacted.

Supporters of the omnibus plan declared it saved time and permitted economies not possible under usual methods.

Opponents, on the other hand, contended that the lump-sum method was confusing, difficult to handle, aided "log rolling" and resulted in greater expense for Uncle Sam.

Bipartisan Support

A review of the Poll's results discloses that in the House it was the Democrats who weighted the Committee in favor of the omnibus procedure, while in the Senate, it was the Republicans.

The survey itself showed that of those favoring the omnibus method, 13 were Democrats and seven were Republicans. Those against it were split more evenly—six were Democrats and seven were Republicans.

Among the House members who were canvassed, 13 supported and 8 opposed the method. Among Senators, five were opposed and seven in favor of the plan.

Varying Enthusiasm

Sponsors of the plan were all for giving it another try in 1951. House Appropriations Committee Chairman Clarence Cannon (D Mo.), who pushed it in the lower chamber, said the bill completely justified itself in its initial year. Harry Flood Byrd (D Va.), who was not on the Senate Appropriations Committee but nevertheless pioneered the plan in the upper body, was enthusiastic about the time conserved by the plan. "At this date last year, " he said in late August when the big money bill went to President Truman, "less than half the 1950 appropriations had been enacted."

But Administration leaders were among those who didn't find the procedure so praiseworthy. Senate Majority Leader Scott W. Lucas (D Ill.) put himself on the record flatly against the plan, while House Majority Leader John W. McCormack (D Mass.) said he doubted it would be tried again in 1951.

Chairman Robert A. Taft (R Ohio) of the Senate GOP Policy Committee, said he wanted to keep the omnibus method and Senate Minority Leader Kenneth S. Wherry (R Neb.) an Appropriations Committee member, also gave it vigorous support.

Improvements Urged

The CQ survey of Appropriations Committeemen showed that although a majority favored the "omnibus" idea, nearly all of them urged that it be improved. Many were vague about the improvements they wanted. Others made specific suggestions.

Rep. Foster Furcolo (D Mass.) liked the omnibus plan but said if it were used again there should be a requirement that an increase in expenditures should also be accompanied by a corresponding decrease in some other item.

Sen. William F. Knowland (R Calif.), while a supporter of the plan, was concerned about the great amount of work loaded on individual members by the omnibus procedure. Sen. Styles Bridges (R N.H.) suggested that a more "adequate staffing" of the committee might possibly remedy this defect.

Rep. Otto Passman (D La.) supported the plan but contended it stirred up more "partisan politics" than it should in the future if it were to work well.

QUOTES FROM SUPPORTERS

Sen. McClellan (D Ark.) — "It should be tried further with some adjustments. I believe it will work successfully."

Rep. Cannon (D Mo.) — "No constructive criticism has been lodged against the adoption of the omnibus appropriation bill. It has vindicated every promise; it has justified every expectation. And no cogent reason has been advanced for a return to the old system. It permits an earlier report on appropriations to the House . . . It contributes to a more thorough consideration and processing of estimates and appropriations. . . . It protects the bill against amendment increasing appropriations. . . . It tends to keep members on the floor. . . . It unquestionably retrenches expenditures . . . It prevents log rolling . . . (and) it visualizes at a glance the outline of national income and expenditures."

Rep. Furcolo (D Mass.) — "I believe in some method of trying to have a definite idea as to the total expenditures to be made . . . I would suggest this: Any amendment offered on the floor calling for increased expenditure, or for any expenditure for a new item, should also provide for a decrease in the exact amount in one or more other items. (This) will (have) a fair possibility of stopping log rolling."

Rep. Kerr (D N. C.) — "Under the present world situation, I am constrained to believe that the omnibus appropriations bill is the proper way in which to meet our obligations and assure our friendship."

Rep. Kruse (D Ind.) — "The new procedure offers hope in our efforts to promote efficiency and economy in government . . . (provided there are) certain changes."

Rep. Norrell (D Ark.) — "It has not worked perfectly this year (but) the experience acquired has been a good start."

Rep. Passman (D La.)—"The omnibus method of appropriating government funds is here to stay. Though confusing (it) will save the taxpayers a minimum of $1 billion for the fiscal year 1951."

Rep. Rabaut (D Mich.) — "The $2.3 billion savings effected this year under the omnibus bill (established) a prima facie case for the feasibility of the system."

Rep. Sheppard (D Calif.)—"In general the appropriations omnibus bill procedure has to a degree expedited consideration, but I do not feel that the (individual projects) are getting the proportion of scrutiny they should receive . . . . Before I would take a completely adverse view I would want to try the operation for one more year."

Sen. Bridges (R N.H.)—"It has already proved to be an improvement over certain of the older methods and could be a still better plan if adequate staffing of the committee could be had."

Sen. Cordon (R Ore.) — "It is absolutely essential if we are to avoid chaos that appropriations be placed in one package so that the relative values can be evaluated while there it still time for readjustment."

Sen. Ferguson (R Mich.) — "Still other reforms in the appropriating process are due. Any difficulties encountered this year in appropriations were not the fault of the omnibus idea. It proved itself."

Sen. Knowland (R Calif.)—"It would be a great mistake to return to the old system . . . a number of improvements could be made in the presentation of this type of bill, perhaps in cutting down the number of subcommittees on which members must serve. . . . However, I think that for the first time in . . . many years . . . we have had one place where Congress and the American people could focus on what the federal government is costing them."

Sen. Saltonstall (R Mass.) — "I believe having all appropriation bills in one package gives us a clearer idea of the financial situation of our government than we get in separate bills. . . . On the other hand, there are certain objections from the point of view of the committee in the handling of the bill. . . . I am undecided (about using the bill again) until I know the method to be employed."

Sen. Wherry (R Neb.) — "It gives the general picture of what the total appropriations are. I do not believe the difficulties encountered so far justify arbitrarily abandoning the plan."

Rep. Engel (R Mich.) — "I am for a single consolidated appropriation bill provided we can make it work without abandoning the basic principles we must follow if we are to have an intelligent method of spending the taxpayers' money."

QUOTES FROM OPPONENTS

Sen. Ellender (D La.) — "There is too much delay in considering the bill as a whole. . . . Under the procedure it is my belief that subcommittees (are) probably less prone to cut as much as they should in anticipation of the committee as a whole cutting more deeply into their appropriations."

Sen. McKellar (D Tenn.) — "The old plan of division into a number of bills is infinitely better. It is a terrible task to handle a one-package appropriations bill. So far as I know it is the most terrible experience I have had in my whole life. I hope the House and Senate will agree to go back to the old plan."

Sen. Russell (D Ga.) — "The omnibus idea means that individual departments must wait for their appropriations as long as all departments. Agriculture would have had its money earlier this year if we hadn't had to wait for all the other bills to be completed first. It makes for bad administration and inefficiency. The plan does not promote economy and it does promote log rolling."

Rep. Yates (D Ill.) — "It is too cumbersome. It receives less attention from the membership as a whole than the individual bills."

Sen. Gurney (R S.D.) — "The argument against the omnibus bill is that the appropriations committees of both houses admitted defeat of their effort to cut down the overall amount and transferred the authority for a mandatory cut of 550 million dollars to the President".

Rep. Case (R S.D.) — "It upset the legislative schedule of both bodies. . . . It became impossible to hold interest in debate because no one could forecast when a particular chapter would come up."

Rep. Fenton (R Pa.) — "It (was) the worst bungled up mess that I have witnessed since I am a member of the (House)."

Rep. Horan (R Wash.) — "It slows up the processing of appropriatons and has not assisted in reducing appropriations."

Rep. Phillips (R Calif.) — "It decreases probability of careful analysis, tempts subcommittees to leave severe cutting to 'central committees' and very definitely members cannot possibly know details of sections as they knew separate bills. Only argument in favor is possibility of reduction in toto."

Rep. Taber (R N.Y.) — "It's a lemon . . . You could hardly blame them (for losing interest in the bill). . . . It was a dull debate and it dragged along. . . . It isn't good to have so little interest in such an important bill."

HJ Res 512—P. L. 627

During its drawn-out consideration of the omnibus appropriations bill (HR 7786), the Congress had to resort twice to emergency financing devices to keep the government's departments and agencies in operation.

This was because the new fiscal year of 1951 began on July 1, 1950—and action on HR 7786 to provide the new year's money was not finally completed until Sept. 6, 1950.

The various federal departments and agencies would have been without funds during the interim if the two emergency resolutions had not been passed. Each of the resolutions was a 30-day "continuing" one which authorized departments and agencies to draw on the Treasury for as much as one-twelfth of the money the House had earmarked for them when the lower chamber originally approved HR 7786 on May 10.

The first of these two resolutions was H J Res 492, which passed the House on June 27, the Senate the next day and was signed into law by the President on June 29. This resolution financed the government on an interim basis for the month of July, 1950—the first month of the new fiscal year.

Since the omnibus appropriations bill had not completed its course through Congress by the end of July, a second temporary resolution was needed. Accordingly, H J Res 512 was passed by the House on July 27, by the Senate the next day, and was signed by the President on July 31.

Supplemental Appropriations

HR 9526—P. L. 843

SUMMARY

While the General Appropriations Act (HR 7786; See page 113) was still winding its way through Congress, North Korean Communist troops invaded the American-backed South Korean Republic and the United States, with the sanction of the United Nations, decided to back up the South Koreans with combat forces.

To finance this operation, to speed general rearmament of the United States and its Western European allies and to implement domestic programs having a military potential, the President in mid-July sent Congress a request for funds ultimately totaling $17,302,658,634. In his message, he asked for $10.5 billion, but this figure gradually swelled until it reached the larger, final total.

Congress went promptly to work, upon receipt of the first request. By late September, President Truman had on his desk a $17,157,402,285 appropriations bill (HR 9526) that carried, in addition, $18 million in borrowing authority.

He signed it Sept. 27 and it became Public Law 843.

Passage Through Congress

Both the House and Senate had passed the measure by voice votes—the House on Aug. 26 and the Senate Sept. 14. The action in the House had been swift and smooth, but in the upper chamber, members got bogged down in a controversy over a rider Sen. Kenneth S. Wherry (R Neb.) wanted to insert, barring Marshall Plan aid to any country shipping to Russia commodities that the Red Army might use.

After a long wrangle, Wherry finally consented to revise the proposed ban so it would apply only to commodities useful in the manufacture of "arms, armaments or military material" which restricted version the Senate adopted by voice vote. The ban, however, was eventually removed from the legislation, after a joint House-Senate conference committee left final disposition of the feature up to the respective chambers.

The House, which got the first crack at this Wherry rider threw it out altogether Sept 21 and approved instead on a roll-call vote, 286 to 30, a substitute proposal directing the National Security Council to determine what exports, shipment of which to Iron Curtain countries by Marshall Plan nations, would cause the latter to lose Marshall aid.

The Senate agreed to this substitute Sept. 22, after first voting, 39 to 28, to cancel out the Wherry proposal.

This sent the legislation to the White House the day before Congress commenced its 1950 pre-election recess. Four days later, on Sept. 27, the President signed the measure without ceremony or comment. As the bill was enacted, 90 per cent of its money went to the military. The new defense sum was $15,736,094,000, of which $4 billion was earmarked for military aid to nations in Europe, and for Greece, Turkey, the Philippines and Southeast Asia.

BACKGROUND

In 1949, Congress passed two supplemental money bills. They were both approved in October.

The First Supplemental Appropriations Act (HR 6008) cleared Congress on Oct. 11, 1949, carrying funds totaling $78,005,129. It was approved as Public Law 358 on Oct. 14. Among items the bill contained were appropriations to implement the Housing Act (P. L. 171) and the Rural Telephone Act (P. L. 423), which passed Congress earlier during the 81st Congress' first session. (See CQ Almanac, Vol. V, Page 241.)

The Second Supplemental Appropriations Act of 1949 (HR 6427) was approved by Congress Oct. 19 and signed by the President on Oct. 28 as Public Law 430. It contained $1,079,082,880.41 in funds, the largest amount of which — $814,010,000 — was earmarked to implement the Atlantic Pact program of military assistance to North Atlantic nations, Greece, Turkey, Korea, Iran, the Philippines and China. (See CQ Almanac Vol. V, Page 244.)

In 1950, North Korean Communists invaded the American-backed Republic of South Korea on June 25. Until that time, it had looked as if the then-pending omnibus funds bill (HR 7786) would adequately finance most government needs in fiscal 1951, which began July 1, 1950.

Within a week, the United States, with the backing of the United Nations, had committed its armed strength to the defense of South Korea against the attackers.

But America had weakened itself militarily in the post-World War II years, and the weakness showed up immediately in Korea. In the first month, North Koreans, despite American intervention, scored victory after victory and appeared to be winning the fight.

President's Message

On July 19, President Truman broadcast to the nation a report on the Korean situation. In that speech, among other things, he outlined the need for new emergency appropriations to finance an increase in the size of the armed forces and to provide additional supplies and equipment for the expanded services. (For story of emergency legislation affecting the domestic economy which President also requested in this speech, see page 624)

"Within the next few days," said the President, "I will transmit to the Congress specific requests for appropriations in the amount of approximately $10 billion."

In accordance with this promise, the President July 24 sent to Capitol Hill a request for $10,486,976,000 in new money and for 600,000 men in new personnel for the armed services, to make America's military forces strong enough to "deter further acts of aggression."

(For a full account of action on legislation increasing the limits on the size of the armed services, see page 303)

The President's request for supplemental military appropriations to finance this added strength was nearly half a billion dollars more than the estimate he had given Congress a few days earlier.

The added money was asked for in a letter submitted by the President to Speaker of the House Sam Rayburn (D Tex.) In it Mr. Truman explained: "The purpose of these proposed estimates is two-fold, first to meet the immediate situation in Korea, and second, to provide for an early, but orderly, build-up of our military forces to a state of readiness designed to deter further acts of aggression."

Bulk For Air Force

Of the money he requested, the President had earmarked the bulk for the Air Force: $4.5 billions, compared to $3 billions for the Army and $2.6 billions for the Navy. Almost $2.8 billions of the Air Force money was stipulated for construction of aircraft. Almost $1.5 billion of the Army's money was tabbed for "ordnance service and supplies" — tanks, guns and ammunition.

In addition to the $10.4 billion requested in new funds for the military services, the President asked for $20 million to expand the Selective Service System and $10 million for a White House emergency fund to be used to meet war contingencies. Altogether, funds requested for military, civil and emergency purposes totalled $10,516,976,000.

HOUSE

Hearings

The House Appropriations Committee took up the money requests the day after they arrived at the Capital. On July 25, the Committee was convened to hear Secretary of Defense Louis Johnson, with his top civil and military aides, urge full support for the new defense funds.

The session was a closed one, but in a public statement Johnson noted that the "over-all combat potential" of U. S. forces was higher than "at any time since post-war demobilization was completed." He asked prompt approval of the estimates.

Witnesses who testified before the House Appropriations Committee were, with a few exceptions, officials of the government called upon to "justify" the appropriation requested for the agency or department represented by that official.

Some Senators and Congressmen appeared in support of projects which interested them.

In one case, a group of Northwestern Republican Congressmen presented opposing views on a proposed $4 million item for initial construction of the Ice Harbor lock and dam on the Snake River.

Rep. Walter Norblad (R Ore.) said the project "would spell out the almost complete ruination of the salmon-fishing industry in the Pacific Northwest." But Rep. Hal Holmes (R Wash.) supported the project, saying it was needed to meet a power shortage in the Northwest. Rep. Thor C. Tollefson (R Wash.) joined Norblad in opposing the project, also on the grounds it would "destroy" fishing resources.

Sen. Henry C. Dworshak (R Idaho) urged a $11 million appropriation for flood-control structures on the Kootenai River in northern Idaho.

Considerable alarm over the proposed establishment of a foot-and-mouth disease research laboratory in Rhode Island was expressed by two "outside" witnesses, George A. Bowling, of Port Chester, N. Y., representing the National Ayrshire Breeders' Association, and Guy E. Harmon, of Kingston, Md. on behalf of the American Guernsey Cattle Club. They said they opposed the introduction of the disease virus into this country on a large scale, even for research purposes.

Sen. Leverett Saltonstall (R Mass.) said "there is very serious doubt in the minds of our new England farmers that the experiments . . . would be so perfectly controlled . . . as to insure health and safety of New England cattle."

Rep. John W. Heselton (R Mass.) urged the Committee to turn down the $24,500,000 requested for establishment of the research center.

Report

On Aug. 24, exactly a month after the President's estimates reached Congress, the Committee approved what it labeled the Supplemental Appropriations Bill, 1951, and introduced it as HR 9526.

The Committee recommended funds totaling $16,771,084,479. The requests had amounted to $16,852,484,598. The military estimates alone had amounted to $15,642,906,000.

Every agency and department of the government figured in this sum but the bulk of it, $11,642,906,000, was for emergency war costs. Another $4 billion was recommended for foreign military assistance. Of this total, $3,504,000,000 was for the North Atlantic area, $303,000,000 was for Greece, Turkey and Iran and $303,000,000 was for the Philippines.

The defense recommendations coincided exactly with what had been requested, though $81,400,119 was cut from non-military items in the President's requests. But the defense money was considerably more than Presisent Truman had asked for in his original, mid-July message to Congress.

This was because:

1. President Truman had not listed the $4 billion for foreign military aid in his budget message, though he provided the Committee with a separate estimate for the program; and

2. The Committee considered about $1.2 billion in other additional budget estimates, above those presented in the emergency program. Most of these were for the construction of aircraft and related procurement.

Group Notes "Circumstances"

In approving the appropriations, the Committee noted in its report that

"the circumstances under which the requirements are presented does not give to either the departments or the Congress sufficient time or information upon which to base the usual careful consideration given to requests for appropriations.

"But," the report noted, "the purpose of the Committee and the Congress now is to . . . bring into balance the defense forces and munitions of war in order to face the realities that presently confront the nation."

Here is a comparison of the budget estimates and the amounts recommended by the Committee:

	Budget Estimate	Committee Recommended
Cash: A total of $16,771,356,007, as follows:

Borrowing Authority:
A total of $18 million, as follows:
F.H.A. (Disaster loans)	25,000,000	18,000,000

General Provisions

A clause was appended to the bill requiring:

1. That all appointments, transfers, promotions or reinstatements during fiscal 1951, or the emergency period, must be on a temporary basis; 2. The Department of Defense may recruit at will qualified personnel from other government agencies; and 3. Federal employees, separated from service in other departments or agencies; must be given preference in new defense jobs.

Here is a recapitulation of some of the individual appropriation items, and what the Committee said about some of them:

Defense Department

Approved were these sums for the service branches: $3,148,499,000 for the Army, $3,684,007,000 for the Navy, and $4,535,400,000 for the Air Force to expand from 48 to 58 groups and to complete a radar network for defense from air attack. Another $260 million was written in for the Atomic Energy Commission to build new plants for making hydrogen and atomic bombs and $18 million was granted the newly-created Federal Maritime Board (formerly U. S. Maritime Commission) to repair reserve fleet vessels. $598,637,370 was written in for the General Services Administration's program of stockpiling critical and strategic materials.

State Department

A total of $62,655,850 was earmarked for International Information and Educational Activities, which include Voice of America broadcasts. A total of $82 million had been requested. Though it had cut a big slice off the estimate, the Committee did write in a provision permitting State to use for its activities $15,212,000 worth of Economic Cooperation Administration counterpart funds (money put up by ECA nations in their own currency to match the dollars supplied them under the assistance program).

Post Office Department

A total of $45,100,000 was recommended to meet new costs of mail service growing out of "certain increases in transportation rates." The Postmaster General, furthermore, was directed to petition the Interstate Commerce Commission for an increase in fourth-class mail rates. He also was authorized to abandon "uneconomical" rural mail routes.

Farmers Home Administration

An $18 million loan authorization was granted to the FHA for the purpose of aiding farmers in disaster-stricken areas.

Agriculture Department

A request for $24,500,000 to construct a foot-and-mouth disease research laboratory at Prudence Island, Rhode Island, was turned down on the grounds that the possibility of "conducting this work in cooperation with other countries which have existing research facilities" should be explored further.

National Science Foundation

A $475,000 request to get the National Science Foundation established and going was denied because, said the Committee, "new programs which will not provide early aid to our defense effort should not be initiated at this time."

Debate

Two days after the report was issued on Aug. 24, the House took up the bill. After a brief debate, which was confined to individual items and amendments, the bill was passed Aug. 26 on a roll-call vote by the whopping margin of 311 to 1.

The only vote against the measure was cast by Rep. Robert F. Rich (R Pa.), a long-time foe of Administration domestic and foreign policy.

The relatively perfunctory debate was stimulated at one point when Rep. Lindley Beckworth (D Tex.) proposed striking out the bill's language giving the Post Office Department authority to abandon mail delivery over routes determined to be "uneconomical" by the Postmaster General. Beckworth said he understood the language was designed to refer to helicopters.

"But," he contended, "I do not know how anyone can read the language and find that it would be limited to helicopter service." He said no definition of the word "uneconomic" had been provided and that it might therefore be interpreted broadly to mean any kind of route.

Rep. J. Vaughan Gary (D Va.) opposed Beckworth's amendment, saying it would deny the Postmaster General authority under which he "can resist any attempt on the part of the CAB (Civil Aeronautics Board) to force him to use a service which is thoroughly uneconomic, which can be handled more cheaply in some other way, and which in every respect is unnecessary."

"Helicopter" Amendment Adopted

Beckworth's amendment to strike out the language was nevertheless approved by teller vote, 86 to 68. Before it was adopted, Rep. Francis Case (R S.D.) had sponsored a perfecting amendment limiting "uneconomical" routes to those flown by helicopter. The Case proposal had been adopted by voice, but was nullified when the Beckworth amendment, throwing out the language altogether, was later accepted.

Rep. Case (R S.D.) also sponsored an amendment providing an additional $300,000 for the Veterans Administration to supply disabled veterans with automobiles or other conveyances. It was approved by voice vote.

Rep. Jamie L. Whitten (D Miss.) offered an amendment to tighten up the Committee provision requiring appointments, transfers, promotions and reinstatements in government service in fiscal 1951 to be temporary.

Approved by voice vote, the strengthening clause assured the temporary nature of future transfers, and provided that no person, separated from the government by a reduction in force, would be eligible for reinstatement in a grade above the grade he held Sept. 1, 1950.

The House rejected on a division vote, 141 to 73, an amendment by Rep. Olin E. Teague (D Tex.) hiking civilian defense funds in the District of Columbia from the $30,000, provided in the bill, to $290,000.

After this, the question of final passage was raised, and the House agreed, 311 to 1, to send HR 9526 to the Senate.

AMENDMENTS ACCEPTED:

Rep. Lindley Beckworth (D Tex.) — Strike out language giving Post Office Department authority to abandon mail delivery over "uneconomical" routes. Division, 86 to 68.

Rep. Francis Case (R S.D.) — Add $300,000 to pay for automobiles for disabled veterans whose applications have been approved but who have been forced to wait because of lack of Veterans' Administration money. Voice vote.

Rep. Jamie L. Whitten (D Miss.) — Strengthen provision requiring future government hiring, transferring, promotion or reinstatement to be on a temporary basis. Voice vote.

AMENDMENTS REJECTED:

Rep. Olin Teague (D Tex.) — Increase civilian defense funds for District of Columbia from $30,000 to $290,000 Division vote, 141 to 73.

SENATE

Hearings

Beginning July 25, the day after the President's multi-billion-dollar emergency request reached Congress, hearings by the Senate Appropriations Committee were held.

The Committee's hearings ran at a more leisurely pace than those in the House, because the lower chamber is required always to act first on any appropriations bill.

Secretary of Defense Louis Johnson appeared twice before the Senate Committee, on July 26 and again on Aug. 30. The first time he urged approval of the billions for increased American military strength, and the second time he wanted favorable action on the foreign aid phase of the appropriations.

Paul Hoffman, administrator of the Economic Cooperation Administration, and Dean Acheson, Secretary of State, also appeared Aug. 30, citing the threat of further Communist aggression as the chief reason for added defense expenditures.

As had been the case before the House Appropriations Committee, nearly all witnesses were officials of the government, called by the Committee to "justify" the money sought for the various agencies and departments with which they were connected. Most of the witnesses, therefore, were from the Defense Department, since most of the money was earmarked for costs of war.

Also as in the House, some Congressmen and Senators testified in favor of projects which particularly interested them.

Sen. Paul H. Douglas (D Ill.) appeared in support of a $12,500,000 appropriation for the International Children's Fund, and Sen. Robert S. Kerr (D Okla.), urged inclusion of a $3,457,240 appropriation for the federal-aid vocational education program. Funds for both these programs had been approved by the Senate for inclusion in the General "Omnibus" Appropriations Act (HR 7786), but had been eliminated in conference. (See omnibus story, page 113.)

Senator Warren G. Magnuson (D Wash.) testified in support of funds to finance flood control and hydroelectric projects in the Pacific northwest: the Eagle Gorge Dam, Ice Harbor lock and dam, and the Albeni Falls Dam and Reservoir. Rep. Compton I. White (D Idaho) urged inclusion of the Ice Harbor Dam project.

There were, in addition, some "outside" witnesses who testified, and a list of other organizations which registered their stands on certain appropriations by mail.

"Outside" Views

Hartman Barber, representative of the Brotherhood of Railway and Steamship Clerks, Freight Handlers, Express and Station Employees, testified in support of the House-inserted provision directing the Postmaster General to petition the Interstate Commerce Commission for an increase in rates on parcel post.

Dr. Carl C. Lindegren, director of the biological laboratory of Southern Illinois University, urged that the Senate restore the $475,000 request for the National Science Foundation which the House Committee had cut from the bill.

The following groups and organizations sent correspondence to the Committee also advocating the initial fund to get the NSF going:

American Council of Learned Societies

American Educational Research Association

American Geographical Society

American Psychological Association

American Society for Engineering Education

Association of Rochester Scientists

University of Cincinnati

Pennsylvania State College School of Engineering

President's Water Resources Policy Commission

Report

The Committee reached its conclusions within two weeks after the House passed HR 9526, and on Sept. 13 submitted its bill to the Senate.

As it came from the Committee, the measure carried a recommended total of $17,192,530,669 in cash, the same $18 million in FHA borrowing authority approved by the House, and $32,500,000 in contract authority. The latter was for further work on the Air Engineering Development Center. A total of $25 million in cash for this project also was added to the Committee's bill. Both the cash and contract authority were written into HR 9526, subject to enactment of authorizing legislation (HR 9612 and S 4118) then before Congress. (Subsequently S 4118 became Public Law 799 validating the appropriations.

In all, the Committee added nearly half a billion, $421,174,592, to the House-approved appropriation. It had considered estimates amounting to $17,302,658,643, besides the borrowing authority item for which $25 million had been asked. The Committee added the contract authority on its own. No estimate on this had been submitted.

The cash estimates themselves, by the time they reached the Senate, were greater than those originally mentioned by the President in his mid-July budget message, and were even greater than those considered by the House. Some new requests for money to finance domestic programs had been submitted after the House finished the bill, and included:

$185,707,300 for the Social Security Agency to implement increased insurance and public assistance benefits provided in the newly-enacted Social Security Amendments of 1950 (HR 6000 see page 165).

$139,800,000 for the General Services Administration to meet initial costs of moving government agencies from Washington to outlying suburbs to minimize effect of atomic attack.

$60 million for the newly-created National Production Administration to regulate the domestic economy to meet war needs.

Here is a recapitulation of the recommendations:

General Provisions:

The Committee eliminated the Whitten rider, requiring temporary appointments, transfers and promotions in government service during fiscal 1951 or the period of the emergency. In its place was written another provision allowing the President to transfer any unused appropriations available to the Coast Guard for carrying out the port-security program under the Magnuson Act (Public Law 679, see page 318).

Here is an account of action on some individual appropriation items:

Defense Department

Another $93,188,000, above Presidential estimates approved by the House, was written into the bill to meet defense costs. Much of this — $40 million — was for an increase in and replacement of naval vessels. A total of $28,188,000 was added to the House-approved $27,878,000 in medical appropriations for the Army and Navy, while $25 million was provided in cash for further work on the Air Engineering Development Center, plus $32.5 million in contract authority. Moreover, the Army was authorized to stockpile 100 million pounds of raw wool.

Foreign Aid

A $12,500,000 item was provided for the International Children's Fund.

State Department

The International Information and Educational Activities of the Department were granted another $14,956,150, providing a total of $77,867,850 in cash. Besides this, the Committee recommended use of $19,600,000 in ECA counterpart funds for the program, instead of the $15,212,000 recommended by the House.

Post Office

The Committee deleted the language written by the House requiring the Postmaster General to request a parcel post rate increase of the Interstate Commerce Commission.

Federal Security Agency

A vocational education item of $3,457,240 was recommended by the Committee, as was $143,575,565 for new expenses of the Social Security Agency.

The Committee also recommended that $23 million be made available upon enactment of HR 7940, the then-pending bill providing federal aid for the maintenance of schools in districts with war - swollen populations. The availability of another $24,500,000 was recommended to implement the also-pending S 2317, companion to HR 7940, providing federal grants to school construction in the same war-crowded areas. (For story of these bills which subsequently became, respectively, Public Laws 815 and 874, see page 181).

Agriculture Department

The House-deleted estimate of $24,500,000 for construction of a foot-and-mouth disease research laboratory was restored in full.

General Services Administration

The Committee turned down a $139.8 million request for funds to disperse capital agencies.

President's Emergency Fund

The full request of $60 million for expenses of the newly-created National Production Administration was granted.

Justice Department

A supplemental estimate of $6 million for the Federal Bureau of Investigation was approved in full.

National Science Foundation

A total of $225,000 was recommended to begin establishment of the National Science Foundation.

Debate

This considerably-augmented version of HR 9526 was taken up by the Senate on Sept. 14.

The money items themselves caused little controversy. Not only were all the Committee appropriations approved, but floor amendments also were adopted revising the total upward by $4,205,000 in cash and $25 million in contracts. Warren G. Magnuson (D Wash.) sponsored the principal cash amendment, adding $4 million for the Ice Harbor development in Wash.

Hubert H. Humphrey (D Minn.) successfully sought a new $25 million contract authority for the proposed school construction program outlined in the then-pending S 2317.

In an agreeable mood, the Senate accepted all amendments presented to it except one. This, to provide $139.8 million to move defense agencies from Washington to suburban areas, was rejected on a point of order. Chairman Kenneth McKeller (D Tenn.), of the Appropriations Committee, had offered this amendment on behalf of the Administration, which was hopeful of getting it approved despite previous thumbs-down action of the Committee.

Sen. Guy Cordon (R Ore.), who made the point of order against the amendment, said "the whole thing seems to me to have been born of hysteria." He argued the matter needed more attention before Congress could act on it. Vice-President Alben W. Barkley then ruled that the amendment was not germane.

Wherry Rider Controversy

The real controversy of the day arose when Kenneth S. Wherry (R Neb.) offered a rider barring all Marshall Plan aid, but not military help, to any ECA nation that shipped to the Soviet Union or any of its satellites any commodity possibly useful to the Red Army. The Nebraskan long had sought such a restriction on ECA funds but time and again had been turned down.

Since the Wherry amendment was not germane to the contents of the money bill, it was necessary for Wherry to win agreement to suspension of the chamber's rules before the proposition could be considered. To this the Senate agreed, 50 to 23.

But the Senate wasn't satisfied with Wherry's original idea. After a long wrangle, an agreement was finally worked out to pin the ban down to commodities useful in the manufacture of "arms, armaments or military materiel." Credit was given to Sen. Guy Cordon, (R Ore.) for drafting the compromise. Wherry agreed to the new language and modified his proposal accordingly before offering it to the Senate for a vote.

The Defense Secretary was directed to draw up a list of the banned commodities, and afterwards the ECA Administrator would have no option but to withhold Marshall Plan aid from any offending country.

The stipulation, Wherry admitted, was aimed directly at the British, who long had been accused by the Republicans of sending to Russia or to Soviet friends articles that might be used in a war.

Senator Henry Cabot Lodge Jr (R Mass.) had wanted to substitute an amendment leaving to the discretion of the ECA Administrator decisions on what ought to be done about military shipments, but he finally supported the compromise.

Lodge had argued that Wherry's original version of the amendment was a "headline approach to a complex subject" that would do a great deal of harm. Joining him in this argument, Sen. A. Willis Robertson (D Va.) asserted that what was afoot was "dollar diplomacy" that might be regarded by the Europeans as "virtually halting their foreign trade to the East" by fiat of the United States.

Sen. Walter F. George (D Ga.), second ranking Democrat on the Foreign Relations Committee, came to Wherry's assistance. He shouted he was "tired of appeasement" and that Congress ought to lay down by law what it wanted done.

After this, the Wherry amendment, as modified by the Cordon limitation, was adopted by voice vote.

The Senate then gave its approval, also by voice, to the bill. By then it contained $17,196,735,669 in cash, plus $57,500,000 in contract authority and the $18 million in borrowing power. General provisions were as the Committee had written them.

CONFERENCE

Bent on a pre-election recess, House-Senate conferees on HR 9526 met at once and within a week had worked out a compromise bill which they reported Sept. 18. Conferees were:

House: Reps. Clarence Cannon (D Mo.), W. F. Norrell (D Ark.), Jamie L. Whitten (D Miss.), John J. Rooney (D N.Y.), J. Vaughan Gary (D Va.), Louis C. Rabaut (D Mich.), John Taber (R N.Y.), R. B. Wigglesworth (R Mass.) and Karl Stefan (R Neb.).

Wherry Amendment Attacked

The conferees' efforts to reach a compromise on the money measure were accompanied throughout the week by a steady Administration attack on the Wherry amendment banning shipment of military items by ECA nations.

President Truman provided the climax Sept. 20 when, on the eve of House action on the conference report, he appealed to Congress directly to defeat the proposed Wherry restrictions. In a letter to Chairmen Kenneth McKellar (D Tenn.) and Clarence Cannon (D Mo.), of the Senate and House Appropriations Committees, respectively, he conceded the amendment's proponents had a point, but that it was insidiously dangerous.

"No one can quarrel with the ostensible purpose of the amendment—to weaken the war-making potential of Communist - dominated countries," he wrote.

"But," he continued, "the fact is that it would defeat its own purposes and accomplish substantially the opposite result from that intended — it would weaken the free nations more that it would weaken the Soviet bloc."

The President thus joined ECA Administrator Paul Hoffman and Gen. Omar Bradley, chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, in urging Congressional leaders to strike out the Wherry rider. Their appeals also had been transmitted in letters.

Hoffman said adoption of the amendment might lead to unemployment in western Europe and thus "severely damage the success of the Marshall Plan in combatting communism in the Marshall Plan countries."

Gen. Bradley called the amendment "wholly impractical and absurd."

Both Hoffman and Bradley pointed out that negotiations with friendly nations for the screening of shipments to Russia and her allies were having results which the Wherry proposal might seriously hamper.

Conference Report Provisions

As it was submitted Sept. 18 the conference report left the Wherry amendment still in disagreement. Similarly, disagreement on about $50 million in money was reported still unresolved.

Total appropriations, however, that were agreed to in conference were $17,076,072,285. The contract authority of $57,500,000 and the $18 million in borrowing authority were left intact.

The Whitten rider, requiring government transfers and promotions to be temporary ones and prohibiting the rehiring of a government employee at a higher grade than he held Sept. 1, 1950, was restored to the bill, in the form the House had written it.

The Postmaster General, as the House had stipulated, was required to petition the Interstate Commerce Commission for an increase in parcel post rates.

The McKellar-Bridges rider, inserted in the Senate, urging ECA nations to write off their intra-European debts, was eliminated.

The Senate-approved amendment permitting transfer of funds to finance the Magnuson port-security act was left intact.

House Action

The House approved money sections of the conferees' compromise version of the bill Sept. 20, voting to insist on total appropriations of $17,099,902,285 in cash. The House refused to back down on its plan to trim items the Senate wanted left in full. The House insisted on reducing such items as social security funds and the appropriation for administration of the new Defense Production Act.

Military money was left exactly as it had emerged from the Senate.

All House floor amendments which had added money to the bill were accepted by the conference, and again endorsed by the House.

Large money amendments added on the Senate floor were accepted by the conferees, though the Chavez-sponsored appropriation of $125,000 for the Children's Bureau was eliminated. The House approved these items in the conference report.

But the McClellan amendment, which had prohibited the Treasury from requiring forfeiture of bonds in the case of Mexican contract laborers who "skip contract", was disapproved by the House on a roll-call vote, 160 to 172.

Wherry Ban Spurned

On Sept. 21, the House went to work on the last, but most controversial, section of the conference report. This was the disputed Wherry rider.

President Truman's appeal for defeat of the rider had reached Congress the day before. In response to the Chief Executive, the House struck out this rider and adopted a substitute proposal banning shipment by ECA nations of militarily-useful commodities to Russia or its supporters, but leaving it up to the National Security Council to determine what type of commodities would be involved.

The substitute had the backing of the Administration. It was offered by Rep. Cannon (D Mo.) and adopted on a roll-call vote, 286 to 30.

The real test on the issue came earlier, however, on a parliamentary move when Rep. John Taber (R N.Y.) sought to offer a proposal of his own that was virtually identical to the Wherry proposition. Taber told the House it must take positive action to prevent "the filtering through of arms and armaments to Russia".

The parliamentary move was this: Taber sought to offer his proposal as an amendment to the Cannon substitute. But Cannon sprang to the defense of his proposal and moved the previous question, adoption of which always serves to shut off debate on, or amendments to, whatever matter is then pending.

On a roll-call vote of 167 to 149, the previous question was ordered and the House proceeded to endorse overwhelmingly the Cannon substitute.

With this action, the House sent the multi-billion-dollar bill to the Senate, though several points were still in disagreement. House insistence on its own version of some of the appropriations and on the Cannon substitute for the Wherry amendment meant the Senate had to reconsider some of its previous decisions.

Senate Action

The Senate response was quick. It decided Sept. 22 by a vote of 39 to 28, to scuttle the Wherry amendment entirely.

But it did this over the insistent objection of the Nebraskan. Commenting on the Cannon substitute, Wherry said "it doesn't carry out what we had in mind at all."

He tried to persuade the Senate to rewrite the proposal by substituting for it still another plan, this one making the original ban applicable to such things as "metals, minerals, tools and facilities" which the Secretary of Defense certified "reasonably might be expected to be used in the manufacture" of arms or militarily useful goods.

The Senate turned down Wherry's substitute on a roll-call vote, 39 to 28. It then adopted by voice vote the House substitute even though Wherry argued vehemently that the substitute provided no more than was already in existing law.

After rejecting the Wherry proposal, the Senate proceeded to accept on a voice vote the conference report precisely as it was worked out by the House.

(For an item-by-item account of appropriations approved in the conference report, see charts beginning page 105.)

General provisions, other than the Wherry amendment, were left as the conference had agreed upon them.

The Senate's acceptance of the House conference action barred the necessity of any further compromise on the measure and sent it on its way to the White House.

Senate refusal to agree to House action would have sent the bill back to conference for further reconciliation, which would have meant a probable delay in the recess toward which Congress was then striving.

LAW ENACTED

President Truman signed HR 9526 on Sept. 27. There was no comment or ceremony. The bill became Public Law 843.

Emergency Resolution

HJ Res 537—P.L. 752

While the 1951 Supplemental Appropriations Act (HR 9526-P.L.843) was still being pushed through Congress, the two chambers rushed into law a resolution (H J Res 537) giving government agencies the green light to go ahead with emergency defense programs without waiting for the multi-billion-dollar appropriation to finance them.

By voice votes, both the House and Senate adopted the stop-gap measure Aug. 31. President Truman signed it Sept. 2 and it became Public Law 752.

Congress-Directed Budget Cuts

Thirty-one federal departments and agencies were singled out Oct. 10 by Budget Director Frederick J. Lawton to bear the brunt of the $550 million cut in fiscal 1951 spending Congress ordered when it passed the General Appropriations Act.

The Bureau of the Budget, which the Act charged with the task of determining where the reductions would be made, picked agencies that were scattered throughout the government. But none of them had any connection with the national defense program. This was a second stipulation by the Act.

The Budget Bureau actually cut more than the $550 million on which Congress had insisted. The Bureau's reductions amounted in all to $580,271,335.

Director Lawton conceded that the cuts might have to be revised somewhat before the fiscal year ended on June 30,1951, but he added that if some cuts were restored, opportunities for savings probably "will be found . . . in other areas."

Impounding of Funds

The cuts he outlined amounted in effect to an impounding of funds. Congress stipulated the reduction should be reached through the long-standing budget apportionment procedure. This means that of the total money each of the 31 agencies get, a specified sum will be held in reserve. It cannot be spent and must remain unobligated at the end of the fiscal year.

While the Bureau specified the cuts according to agency and activity, it left the agency itself to disclose which projects will be trimmed to fit the reductions.

Largest reduction was made in Agriculture Department funds — it amounted to $150 million. Rural electrification loans were to bear $66,427,000 of this; rural telephone loans $19,073,000; farm housing loans $24,500,000 and other agriculture programs $40 million.

Foreign aid was cut $100 million — $50 million each for the European Recovery Program, and government and relief in occupied areas.

Hospital Grants Cut

The Federal Security Agency was cut $88,397,035, of which $75 million was for hospital construction grants.

This item aroused enough controversy to prompt Lawton to explain:

"Out of the $150 million granted in the General Appropriations Act for hospital construction grants, $75 million has been placed in reserve. The remaining $75 million, together with $92 million still available from 1950 funds, makes a total of $167 million available during the 1951 fiscal year, compared to obligations for the 1950 fiscal year of $118 million.

"The savings will limit the number of new hospital projects . . . but will not necessitate delay or cancellation of any projects which already have received final approval."

Veterans Administration was cut $12,635,000, primarily in salaries and expenses; Interior Department was trimmed of $73,012,000, the bulk from reclamation and power marketing agencies; and Army civil functions was reduced by $51,000,000.

The Budget Bureau cut itself $50,000, the only agency affected in the President's executive offices.

Second Supplemental Appropriations Bill

H R 9920—P. L. 911

SUMMARY

The throttle of government spending, opened wide by rapidly mounting costs of the Korean war and American and Western European rearmament, was stretched even further with the enactment into law Jan. 6, 1951, of HR 9920, the Second Supplemental Appropriation Act. Signed on that day by President Truman, it became P.L. 911.

Virtually every cent of the bill's $19,841,412,938 in cash and $224 million in contract authority was earmarked for the military. It raised to approximately $50 million the new cash appropriated by the 81st Congress's second session for the quickened buildup of the nation's armed strength. Requests for still more billions were in store for the 82nd Congress.

The $20 billion measure carried $16,795,181,000 for the Army, Navy, Air Force and Marines, $1,065,000,000 for the expanding atomic energy program and $1,834,911,000 for the stockpiling of copper, rubber, zinc, nickel, tin and other critical materials. The rest of the money went to domestic agencies, but most of it was earmarked for defense-related programs.

Rushed through Congress in a month's time the big money bill might have been enacted in even less time had it not been for two stumbling blocks. These were (1) the Senate amendment adding $224 million in contract authority for the Maritime Administration to begin construction of speedy new dry-cargo ships capable of carrying helicopters to spot submarines; and (2) the House-approved $1,850,000 (later deleted by the Senate) for the Southeastern Power Administration to construct transmission facilities from Buggs Island Dam to Langley Field, Virginia.

Both items were ultimately included in the measure when it became law.

Only one roll-call vote was taken on the measure during its legislative action. This was in the Senate, where private power proponents wanted to remove the SPA money, on the grounds that public power lines would be superfluous. But the chamber voted, 43 to 41, to retain it.

Passed by the House Dec. 15, the measure was sent to the Senate, which agreed to it Dec. 21. House dissatisfaction with Senate inclusion of the ship construction funds led to a delay in appointment of conferees to work out with the Senate the differences in the two versions of the bill. The lower body went home for the Christmas holidays, leaving the big money proposal in temporary abeyance.

Returning to Washington for its unprecedented New Year's Day session, the House finally sent the measure to conference, where agreement was quickly reached. Final passage of the conference report was voted the same day in the House, after it agreed to retain the shipbuilding money. The next day, the Senate added its endorsement to the report, and sent the bill to the White House.

Provisions

These were the major provisions of HR 9920:

Appropriation	Estimate	Law
Legislative Branch	.....	$38,000
State-Justice-Commerce-Judiciary	$18,237,000	16,725,000
Treasury-P.O.	27,361,000	27,156,000
Labor-FSA	175,000	10,175,000
Interior	3,300,000	3,300,000
Independent Offices	2,986,429,000	2,983,854,000
Defense	16,845,181,000	16,795,181,000
Foreign Aid	38,000,000	.....
Claims and Judgments	6,983,938	6,983,938
TOTAL	19,925,666,938	19,841,412,938

Votes

All votes, with one exception on HR 9920 were by voice. That exception was in the Senate Jan. 2, when the chamber was debating the conference report and Sen. Carl Hayden (D Ariz.) won roll-call approval, 43 to 41, of his motion to include in the bill $1,850,000 for the Southeastern Power Administration.

BACKGROUND

President Truman and key Administration officials made it clear that the 1951 Supplemental Appropriation Act (P.L. 843; see Almanac, p. 130) was only the beginning and that they would later ask Congress for more defense money in 1950 to meet skyrocketing costs of the Korean war and new American defense preparations.

While Congress was hustling in the hustings, the President put the Bureau of the Budget to work on the job of pricing urgent defense needs. When the lawmakers returned to Washington Nov. 27, after their election recess, the resulting big bill (HR 9920) was waiting for them.

In the meantime, however, the Korean war had gone from bad to better to worse. Even as the second Supplemental Appropriation Bill was going through the legislative processes, the President and his administration forces were again preparing the ground for submission of requests for yet bigger military funds in the new 82nd Congress.

President's Message

On Dec. 1, President Truman sent Congress a message asking approval "with utmost speed" of another $16,845,181,000 for direct military costs, mostly for Army expansion. He also asked for new outlays for the Atomic Energy Commission and the Tennessee Valley Authority, to speed up the atomic and hydrogen bomb program.

Here is how his requests broke down:

For the Army	$9,210,865,000
For the Navy	2,979,371,000
For the Air Force	4,603,011,000
For the Office of the Secretary of Defense ..	51,000,000
Atomic Energy Commission	1,050,000,000
Tennessee Valley Authority	84,000,000

In his message, the President explained that the strength of American ground troops had been 1,500,000 men and women in June, 1950, when the Korean war began, and had later been increased by "more than 50 per cent" to more than 2.25 million men and women. He said the goal "until this most recent act of aggression, has been a strength of 2.8 million by the end of the current fiscal year," and he added: "Now we face the necessity (because of Chinese intervention in the Korean conflict) of having to raise our sights, both in terms of manpower and in terms of production."

Mr. Truman did not spell out the details but he told the legislators that "this prospect makes it essential that the funds I am now requesting be made available speedily in order to build up our military strength as rapidly as possible."

He assured Congress the appropriations request was "not a war budget . . . this would obviously require far more money." He explained the money would "permit us to go ahead at once to step up the size of the armed forces . . . to increase rapidly the rate of production of planes, tanks and other military equipment . . . (and) at the same time we can be going ahead with plans for such further expansion as may be necessary."

Besides the huge new military and atomic energy funds, the President also had asked Congress, on Nov. 29, for $80,525,000 in other supplemental funds to run various government agencies until the next regular appropriation, and for authority to divert for cargo ship construction $126 million (in cash and contract authority) previously appropriated to the Federal Maritime Administration for other purposes.

HOUSE

Hearings

The House Appropriations Committee went promptly to work. Hearings were started by the various Appropriations Subcommittees Dec. 1, the same day the President's military estimates were received. The lengthiest hearings, lasting 10 days, were conducted by the Military Appropriations Subcommittee. In the case of the Omnibus Appropriations Act (P.L. 759, see Almanac, p. 113), which carried military funds as large as those in HR 9920, the Committee had deliberated for six weeks.

All testimony was taken in executive meetings. It was released for publication when HR 9920 was reported to the House on Dec. 15.

High on the list of witnesses was Gen. George C. Marshall, Secretary of Defense. Marshall centered his testimony on the $575 million the Defense Department wanted to use to expedite production and to prepare for production by constructing, rehabilitating converting and expanding government-owned and privately-owned facilities.

Emphasizing that total mobilization was not advisable at the time he testified, Marshall nevertheless warned that the need for rapid preparation of assembly lines for all phases of defense production was essential. He held out little hope that total mobilization would never be necessary—he said there was little more than a "hope" that all-out war would not come.

"I feel that the important thing at this time, in view of the immediate necessities for the build-up, is to lay down the assembly lines, the tooling, the jigs and so forth, so that we can quickly build up what may be necessary, rather than to get such quantities as are possible now without developing the facilities," Marshall reiterated.

Asked if the proposed money allotment was sufficient, Marshall replied that it was. He added: "Unless you are in a shooting war and everybody in the country is moving that way, without any objections, and all have their shoulders to the wheel, this is about as fast as you can digest these sums of money and these accretions of personnel."

Marshall concluded: "Even if I think the possibility is very serious of a shooting war within the next three or four months I would say that this emphasis on production is the way to begin . . . We are trying to avoid it in every way that is conceivably within reason without being projected into an all-out war; and at the same time we realize that an all-out war can be initiated by a single word from the other side." He did not elaborate.

Deputy Secretary of Defense Robert A. Lovett testified that the estimates were "obviously not a war-footing budget request. That would involve hundreds of billions of dollars." Lovett emphasized the estimates were prepared on the basis of the situation existing in mid-November, before Chinese Communists entered the Korean war, and on the world outlook at that time.

Secretary of the Army Frank Pace was more blunt. He said the multi-billion-dollar outlay was outmoded even before the first action could be taken on it. As Pace put it, the "top has been removed from the military budget."

Secretary of the Air Force Thomas K. Finletter told the Subcommittee that the planned goal of 68 wing units by June 30, 1951, might not be entirely realized. However, he added, it was expected the force would be built to 84 wings by July, 1952. Finletter also warned the group that further appropriations for the Air Force might be necessary before the next regular appropriation in July, 1951.

Officers Testify

Gen. Omar Bradley, chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, declared that previously a gradual build-up of forces by 1954 had been planned because that was the time "we originally thought was the dangerous period." He said the "present situation" had caused us to move that date down to 1952.

Gen. J. Lawton Collins, Army Chief of Staff, joined in stressing the need for preparing for production of arms and equipment. He said at one point that expenditures for certain types of artillery ammunition in August and September in Korea had exceeded that spent in World War II by 300 per cent. He pointed out the period had been just before the Inchon landings in Korea. Gen. Hoyt Vandenberg, Chief of Staff of the Air Force, emphasized his confidence in strategic air war (the destruction of an enemy's munitions-producing centers) and said it could help an outnumbered land army save Western Europe from an aggressor. He said Korea couldn't be taken as an example because in that war zone there was an "inviolate border and you can't use strategic air in full measure." He referred to the Yalu River frontier, which Vandenberg said had been made inviolate by the United Nations.

Adm. Forrest Sherman, Chief of Naval Operations, told the legislators that the Navy intended to spend $10 million of its funds to get at least four aircraft carriers of the "mothball fleet". Each, Sherman said, would have a caretaking, nucleus crew aboard. He explained that the bulk of the Navy funds would go to correct: 1. the inability of naval air fields and aircraft carriers to handle the big new jet planes coming into service, and 2. the general shortage of "operating forces" — warships and planes.

Rear Admiral H. R. Thurber, director of logistic plans, said the Navy planned to build several "master jet air fields" costing $30 million each on the Atlantic, Pacific and Gulf coasts.

Assistant Secretary of Defense W. J. McNeil reported a rapid rise of 70 to 100 per cent in the cost of electronics components such as resisters, and that much of the money requested for research and development was for work in the electronics field. McNeil also reported that prices had dropped in some fields. For instance, he said, the price of a tank had fallen from $330,000 in 1949 to $216,000 in 1950.

Questioned about a $17 million item for blood plasma, Col. S. G. Smith, chief of the Supply Division of the Army's Medical and Hospital Department, replied that it was paid to the Red Cross for collecting blood, processing it into plasma and handling the overseas shipment for the armed forces. The sum, he testified, included no payments to the blood donors themselves and was merely for "out of pocket costs. No part of the funds was for the Red Cross civilian program, the military officer explained.

Committee

Since speed was essential, the Subcommittee's recommendations to the full Committee were immediately incorporated into a report which was rushed to the printer before the full Committee itself had a chance to pass on it. The Subcommittees had approved a total appropriation of $17,820,404,424, compared with budget requests of $18,081,046,034. All funds for the military had been approved intact, but $260,641,610 had been cut from other items, mostly from the atomic energy program.

But on Dec. 15, the day the bill was scheduled to be reported and finally acted on, the full Committee held a morning session and decided at the last minute on one big money addition and one minor subtraction. It added a new $224 million for the Maritime Administration to start building 50 new dry-cargo ships, including 16 for which a transfer of a previously appropriated $126 million had already been approved in the bill. It subtracted $11.1 million from TVA funds.

Instead of effecting these changes from the floor, the Committee decided to write them into the report as it went to the House. This meant the whole report and bill had to be rewritten. After this, HR 9920 carried a recommended total of $18,033,304,424, just $47,741,610 below the estimates.

Here is a breakdown of the bill as it was formally reported:

Agency	Budget Estimates	Committee Recommended
Legislative Branch	.....	$ 12,500
State-Justice-Commerce-Judiciary	$ 10,237,000	9,725,000

TOTAL	18,081,046,034	18,033,304,424

Report

The Committee noted in its report accompanying HR 9920 that it had been unable to give the most careful scrutiny to the defense requests but had approved them with the faith that military leaders would exercise the maximum economy consistent with safety. It observed that unless something was done soon to "control and stabilize the price structure", rising costs would make it necessary to furnish more money to obtain the things that should be bought with funds provided or proposed.

The cut of $210 million it had made in atomic energy funds, said the Committee, would not affect the program for stepping up production of atomic weapons. It said the AEC had not acquired sites for all of its planned construction and its budget estimates were indefinite. It promised additional money when needed.

The entire $3,250,000 sought for salaries and expenses of the National Advisory Committee for Aeronautics was refused with the explanation that the agency had sufficient funds on hand to carry on its required work. A sum of $10,787,890 was approved for the Selective Service System, although $212,110 was cut from the funds requested. For the Subversives Activities Control Board, the Committee recommended $175,000, to be added to the $60,000 already allocated from the President's emergency fund. The total was $75,000 less than requested.

Floor Action

The bill was reported to the House at 12 noon, Dec. 15. At approximately 1 p. m., the House began debating it, after agreeing in advance to limit the talk to three hours.

Chairman Clarence Cannon (D Mo.), of the Appropriations Committee, presented the measure to the chamber "reluctantly," but he had, he said, "no alternative." Said Cannon: "We must arm as rapidly as we can. We must be as strong as we can—as soon as we can."

Rep. John Taber (R N.Y.), ranking Republican on the Appropriations Committee, said the American people must give up all except "'absolute necessities" and "dig in" to pay for the booming defense program. Rep. George H. Mahon (D Tex.), chairman of the Military Appropriations Subcommittee, warned that America's hope that large-scale war could be averted "is sustained by a very tenuous thread." He said "adoption of this appropriation bill (brings us) closer than ever to the conclusion that full-scale war may possibly be upon us at any moment."

The only opposition to the armaments spending program was voiced by Rep. Vito Marcantonio (ALP N.Y.), who said the bill was "merely the implementation of an insane war program" and that the United States was following "a doctrine of the inevitability of war." He said the "best defense of these United States . . . is a policy of peace" which recognizes the national aspirations of the people of China and Korea for self-determination.

When the House came to voting on amendments, it first knocked out the $224 million fund for the Maritime Administration to build 50 new cargo ships. By its action, the House also killed off the bill's concomitant reallocation of $126 million in previously-appropriated funds for the Maritime Administration to get the program started with 16 new freighters. Rep. W. F. Norrell (D Ark.) made a point of order against the provision, and was sustained by Rep. Jere Cooper (D Tenn.), the chairman. Norrell told the House there were already "more than 2,000 cargo ships of World War II vintage available." Rep. Taber said he also was opposed to large-scale production of an "untried" type of ship.

Rep. Albert Thomas (D Tex.) then offered a new amendment providing a total of $350 million — including the $126 million in reappropriated funds — for the ship program but the House refused on a division vote to accept it. The count was 42 to 61. Other attempts were made to add money to the bill, but none succeeded.

By voice vote, the House then passed HR 9920 altogether.

AMENDMENTS ACCEPTED

W. F. Norrell (D Ark.) — Delete the $224 million in cash and $126 million in reappropriated funds for the Maritime Administration. Point of order.

John Taber (R N.Y.) — Delete clause allowing TVA to make purchases and contracts for supplies and services without regard to requirements for advertising or competitive bidding. Point of order.

AMENDMENTS REJECTED

Albert Thomas (D Tex.) — Appropriate $350 million for new cargo ship construction program. Division, 42 to 61.

John E. Fogarty (D R.I.) — Allot a new $75 million to the states for aiding hospital construction. Voice.

Fogarty (D R.I.) — Allot $2,625,000 for the National Institute of Health to further research in neurological diseases, arthritis and rheumatism. Division, 26 to 59.

T. Millet Hand (R N.J.) — Appropriate $5 million for aid to disaster-stricken areas as provided in P.L. 875. Voice.

Francis Case (R S.D.) — Require all contracts and subcontracts over $1,000 in connection with TVA and AEC to be subject to renegotiation. Point of order.

SENATE

Committee

The Senate Appropriations Committee went to work on the multi-billion-dollar defense outlay as quickly as had its counterpart in the House, but, since the lower chamber was required to act first upon the appropriations legislation, the Senate group did not complete its work as speedily.

The witnesses who testified before the Senate Committee were in the main the same ones who testified in the House. (See p. 140.) Their arguments were in the same vein, as well.

Gen. George C. Marshall, Secretary of Defense, among those who appeared before both groups, reported Dec. 9 that President Truman was "seriously considering" the declaration of a state of national emergency. (This the President subsequently did on Dec. 15. Marshall made the advance disclosure of the proclamation as he left the Committee room after a closed meeting.)

On Dec. 20, the Committee reported a bill calling for an appropriation of $19,973,062,938. The military items were left exactly as the House had voted them but $2,163,758,514 was added to other programs, including some funds which the House had turned down.

Largest increase was $1,834,911,000 for the stockpiling of strategic and critical materials. President Truman submitted the request late Dec. 15 after the House had already passed HR 9920.

Other additions made by the Senate group included: $240 million for the Atomic Energy Commission; $2.5 million for the Tennessee Valley Authority; $75 million for the Public Health Service to aid the states in building hospitals; $10 million to build access roads for military and defense establishments; and $3,250,000 for personnel increases for the National Advisory Committee for Aeronautics.

Only one major item approved by the House was knocked out by the Senate Committee. This was $1,850,000 for the Southeastern Power Administration to build distributing lines from the Buggs Island project to Langley Field, Virginia.

Floor Action

Working at top speed, the Senate Dec. 21 took up HR 9920 and passed it by voice vote within less than an hour.

There were some floor amendments which both added and subtracted money from the bill.

Another kind of amendment was sponsored by Sen. William F. Knowland (R Calif.) and was offered with the consent and approval of the Appropriations Committee, of which he was a member. The amendment authorized the President, in his discretion, to allocate $112 million in ECA funds, or five per cent of the fiscal 1951 ECA appropriation, for use in the China area. It was approved by voice vote.

AMENDMENTS ACCEPTED

Kenneth McKellar (D Tenn.), for Committee — Add $224 million in contract authority for Maritime Administration to speed construction of 50 dry-cargo ships. Voice.

Styles Bridges (R N.H.) — Slash $50 million from the $100 million in emergency relief provided for Korean civilians. Voice.

Bridges — Bar use of any funds in Communist-dominated areas. Voice.

McKellar — Allow TVA to negotiate contracts and purchases without regard to bidding and advertising requirements. Voice.

William F. Knowland (R Calif.), for Committee — Allow President, in his discretion, to allocate $112 million in ECA Funds for use in China area. Voice.

AMENDMENT REJECTED

James E. Murray (D Mont.) — Allow a retroactive federal subsidy of up to $100,000 for small producers of strategic minerals and metals. Point of order.

CONFERENCE

It was expected that conferees would be appointed at once to work out the differences in the differing versions of the big defense spending measure passed by the two chambers, so that the compromise might be acted upon and dispatched to the White House before the then - approaching Christmas holidays.

But obstacles developed that prevented this, and the bill was held over for final passage at the 81st Congress' unusual post-holiday finish.

Instead of appointing conferees, as the Senate had requested within an hour after it passed the bill, Chairman Clarence Cannon (D Mo.), of the House Appropriations Committee, got House approval of a stop-gap resolution (H J Res 555) allowing the government to spend any funds in the pending bill at the lower figure voted by either body. Cannon was an opponent of the $224 million in contract authority for ship construction which the House had thrown out and the Senate had reinserted. He held that his resolution would help knock out the item.

But Senators, who generally favored the project, did not even take up the Cannon resolution and insisted instead upon a conference on the appropriation bill. The House responded with silence and went home for Christmas without naming its conferees.

The deadlock was broken on Jan. 1, when the House returned to hold its unprecedented 1951 New Year's Day session. Conferees were formally named as follows:

Reps. Cannon, George Mahon (D Tex.), Michael J. Kirwan (D Ohio), John Taber (R N.Y.) and R. B. Wigglesworth (R Mass.)

Here is a breakdown of the bill as reported to the Senate:

Conferees Meet

Agreement on important differences was rapidly reached. But the controversial ship construction item could not be compromised. The conferees were also unable to reach a decision on the House-voted $1,850,000 for the Southeastern Power Administration. Earmarked for construction of power transmission facilities from Buggs Island Dam to Langley Field, Va., the money had been deleted by the Senate.

Failing to resolve differences over these items, the conferees went on to report that part of the bill they could agree upon, and left the remainder of the decisions up to the two chambers.

Hastening its pace, the House grabbed the compromise measure and, at the urging of Rep. Albert Thomas (D Tex.) but over the objections of Reps. Cannon and Taber, decided to accept the ship construction money. Most of the debate centered on these funds. Cannon argued that there were already 2,000 cargo ships available from World War II and that the Joint Chiefs of Staff had not requested the new program. Thomas replied that the available ships were too slow and had to be escorted by naval vessels. He said the new freighters would carry submarine-spotting helicopters. Taber said the new snorkel submarines could easily catch the proposed cargo ships.

Acceptance of the new contract authority was decided on a standing vote of 127 to 82. In approving the contract money, the House also agreed to its companion provision continuing the availability of $126 million in previously appropriated, but still unused, Maritime funds.

Passage of the bill was then voted by voice, after Rep. Vito Marcantonio (ALP N.Y.) asked that the record note his opposition. Prior to passage, Rep. Gordon Canfield (R N.J.) delivered a warning against the activities of "ten percenters who are resuming operations again." He referred to Washington agents who seek contracts for their clients.

Senate Action

In the Senate Jan. 2, the SPA money sparked a debate that developed into a public-versus private-power fight. Proponents contended the proposed line was necessary for defense purposes; opponents countered that private interests were capable of supplying all the necessary power.

Upon a motion of Sen. Carl Hayden (D Ariz.) , the Senate agreed to recede from its amendment which struck the power item from the bill. His motion carried by roll-call vote, 43 to 41.

Compromise Bill Passed

The compromise bill was then passed by voice vote and sent to the President for his final action.

Terms of the compromise included:

Fifty million dollars for Korea civilian relief, instead of the $100 million originally proposed by the House.

Authority for President Truman to use up to three per cent of ECA funds for aid in the "China area", instead of the five per cent approved by the Senate.

Ten million dollars in hospital construction funds instead of the Senate-voted $75 million.

Deletion of the provision allowing TVA to negotiate contracts and purchases without regard to bidding and advertising requirements.

LAW ENACTED

President Truman signed HR 9920 Jan. 6, 1951, and it became Public Law 911.

District of Columbia Funds

H R 8568 -- P.L. 616

Although the appropriation of federal money for the District of Columbia was effected in the General Appropriations Act of 1950 (see page 113), a further law affecting Washington revenues was passed by the Congress.

This was a bill (HR 8568) which authorized the District to spend specified amounts out of funds the District received in its own right — that is apart from funds granted by the U. S. Treasury. The District is not empowered to spend either kind of money without express authorization from the Congress.

Non-federal revenues accruing to the District go into three funds: the District's general fund (holding such revenues as taxes), the District's highway fund and the District's water fund. Under the terms of HR 8568 — and similar bills in the past — Washington's Commissioners were empowered to make disbursements totalling $118,049,256, out of these funds, as follows:

From the general fund: appropriations for general administration fiscal services, compensation and retirement fund expenses, debt service, regulatory agencies, public schools and libraries, and police, fire and recreation departments, police and firemen's retirement relief, courts, veterans services, health department, Department of Corrections, public welfare, certain public works, the National Guard and certain national parks.

From the highway fund: appropriations for the bulk of public works.

From the water fund: appropriations for additional public works, including the Washington aqueduct.

Breakdown By Categories

As signed by the President HR 8568 carried these appropriations (in thousands of dollars rounded):

General District Administration	616

Regulatory Agencies (such as Alcoholic Beverage Control Board, Public Utilities Commission, etc.)	1,133

Policemen's & Firemen's Relief	3,400

Department of Corrections	3,440
Public Welfare	16,189

National Guard	105
National Capital Parks	1,747
National Capital Park and Planning Commission	91
National Zoological Park	573

Law Enacted

The passage of HR 8568 through Congress provoked relatively little controversy.

As submitted, the budget estimates for the District's disbursement needs totalled $121,209,575. But when the House Appropriations Committee reported HR 8568 this total had been scaled down to $112,840,340. The bill was reported May 19.

The House passed the measure on May 23, leaving intact this latter sum. But the Senate Appropriations Committee raised the total. When the Senate group reported its version of the measure on June 27 the bill carried a total of $119,019,562. The Senate made no changes in this figure when it passed the bill July 5.

A conference committee met July 10 to iron out differences between the Senates figures and those of the House. Some 72 hours later the conferees reached agreement. Their compromise total was $118,049,256.

Without taking record votes, the House and Senate approved this conference version of HR 8568 on July 13, clearing it to the White House where President Truman signed it into Public Law 616 on July 18.

Housing Act of 1950

SUMMARY AND BACKGROUND

Congress completed action in 1950 on a housing bill (S 2246) designed to aid middle-income groups. Provisions authorizing special aid for cooperative and non-profit housing projects were dropped, however, from both the House and Senate versions of the bill. As finally approved, the measure contained a variety of amendments to the National Housing Act. FHA and FNMA money was increased, and new types of loan guarantees and direct loans for housing were included.

During the first session of the 81st Congress the House approved a bill (HR 6070) to amend the National Housing Act (CQ Almanac, Vol. V, p. 286). The bill extended the authority of the Federal Housing Administration to guarantee certain housing loans; increased the money available for such guarantees; increased money available to the Federal National Mortgage Association; and authorized the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to make special housing loans.

The House-approved bill did not see Senate action in 1949, but a similar Senate bill (S 2246) was approved by the Senate Banking Committee. The Senate bill contained a $1 billion authorization for direct loans to cooperative housing projects—a provision rejected by the House. There was no further action on either of the bills in 1949. Expiring provisions of the old Act were extended by an emergency resolution, however.

When the second session of the 81st Congress opened, the chairmen of both the House and Senate Banking Committees prepared bills to take the place of the ones considered during the first session. The new measures picked up most of the provisions of the old bills, but featured a cooperative housing loan program, to be financed through a new government corporation backed by private investors.

The Senate committee reported its new bill under the old number after considerable alteration. The House bill was reported under a new number (HR 7402). The Senate measure was approved after the co-op loan provision was dropped on a 43-38 roll call vote. The House paralleled Senate action, cutting out the co-op section on roll call 218-155. Final House approval came on a 361-10 roll-call vote. After compromise of the two versions, the middle-income housing bill was finally approved by both houses by voice votes and sent on to the President. It became Public Law 475.

SENATE

Committee

On Jan. 12, 1950 Chairman Burnet R. Maybank (D S. C.) of the Senate Banking Committee presented to his Housing Subcommittee 12 amendments which he proposed to add to S 2246 (approved by the Committee in 1949). In effect, the amendments would rewrite the bill to do the following:

1. Provide technical assistance and advice to co-op and non-profit groups authorized to provide housing.

2. Establish a corporation to make $1.7 billion worth of long-term mortgage loans at low interest to housing cooperatives.

3. Secure private capital for the corporation by issuing government-backed debentures.

4. Liberalize FHA insurance under existing housing act to increase the value of housing units eligible for insurance and increase the per cent of the cost that may be insured.

5. Add $1.25 billion to the FHA mortgage insurance fund.

6. Make home modernization and repair loan provisions permanent.

7. Encourage construction of inexpensive rental units for families with children.

Hearings Opened

The Subcommittee on Housing opened hearings on the Maybank amendments Jan. 12. Raymond M. Foley, housing and home finance administrator, the first witness, said the Administration bill called for aid in construction of homes to rent for $45 to $73 a month. These units would serve middle-income families, he said, which have cash incomes of from $2,700 to $4,400 a year.

Subcommittee attention soon turned to the interest rate of the proposed cooperative loans. The Maybank amendments did not specify an interest rate, but estimates of three per cent were offered.

Paul H. Douglas (D Ill.) wanted to know how that rate could be justified when GI and FHA loans went at 4 and 4 1/2 per cent. Foley said he would bring in figures backing up the proposed interest rate.

Subcommittee Chairman John Sparkman (D Ala.), author of the original bill (S 2246), suggested Jan. 18 that the top interest rate for all government-insured mortgage loans be set at four per cent. Sparkman said Foley would agree to that figure. When asked by Maybank whether a GI loan interest rate raise was being considered, Foley declined to answer. Any answer, he said, would influence the whole home financing picture. Other witnesses and their testimony included:

Horace Russell, general counsel for the United States Savings and Loan League, told the committee that the co-op loan plan "is not only pure socialism to the extent of two billion dollars, the scheme is designed and intended to mislead." Sparkman charged that Russell's statement was "unfair and not correct" and said that Senators who wrote the bill would not "lead the people down the road to socialism."

Oscar R. Dreutz, National Savings and Loan League, said that private lenders were providing all the capital needed.

UAW Supports Measure

Walter Reuther, United Auto Workers, supported the bill because "it permits the people to build homes and does not permit the speculator to milk the people of America."

William Reckman, American Bankers Association, said the proposed program was not needed. "Evidence of overbuilding is already beginning to appear in various localities around the country," he said. "It should not be more than a year or two before housing supply and demand are balanced."

Murray Lincoln, Cooperative League of the U.S.A., told the Committee he favored the program in general, but proposed a separate cooperative housing agency to administer the plan. The bill called for creation of a division in the Housing and Home Finance Agency.

NAREB Opposes Bill

John C. Thompson, National Association of Real Estate Boards, testified before the committee on the bill Feb. 7. He said he opposed the bill "because it provides for basically direct mortgage lending by the government . . . it is class legislation . . . it is discriminatory in many ways."

David L. Krooth, National Housing Conference, supported the bill. Persons in the middle-income bracket, he said, "can't afford new housing that is being built for rent or sale, nor is there an adequate supply of existing houses available to them at prices they can afford. Therefore these families must look to additional production of housing to meet their needs."

Group Approval

The bill was approved by the subcommittee Feb. 7 by a 6-1 vote. Approving the measure were Sparkman, Ralph E. Flanders (R Vt.), Irving Ives (R N.Y.), Maybank, Douglas and Russell Long (D La.). John Bricker (R Ohio) voted "No".

The full committee, however, voted Feb. 9 to postpone action on the bill for two weeks. Maybank said the delay was to allow the committee to examine possible inflationary effects of the bill. He said the Federal Reserve Board would present its views on housing and inflation Feb. 16.

On the decision to delay final approval by the whole committee, the vote was 7-6. Voting to defer action were Charles W. Tobey (R N.H.), who made the motion; J. William Fulbright (D Ark.), A. Willis Robertson (D Va.), Homer Capehart (R Ind.), Flanders, Bricker and Ives. Against the motion were Glen Taylor (D Idaho), Sparkman, J. Allen Frear (D Del.), Douglas, Long and Maybank.

More Study

In the interim a basic overhauling of the Administration middle-income cooperative housing proposal was recommended by the Federal Reserve Board when Thomas B. McCabe, board chairman, testified before the Banking Committee Feb. 16.

McCabe told Senators that the disputed program should be given "a full and fair trial on an experimental basis." He wanted financing of the program to be on the Federal Housing Administration principle of government insurance of home loans by private banks. The bill called for establishing a new government lending institution, a National Mortgage Corporation of Housing Cooperatives.

The Federal Reserve Board chairman expressed "concern" over financial terms of the bill — allowing amortization terms of 50 to 60 years. He also was concerned over the low interest rates of the Administration bill, which would grant loans at 3 to 3 1/2 per cent interest over 50 years in most cases, as compared with the FHA program of 4 1/2 per cent interest and repayment of loans generally in 25 years.

The Reserve Board was reporting only on the economic and financial aspects of the bill, he emphasized. In response to questioning by Sen. Fulbright, McCabe said the Board is opposed to the bill "as written."

Sen. Bricker, a member of the Committee, said in a letter to certain members of the Committee that possibility of political favoritism is "'rampant" in the bill. Sparkman, author of the measure, denied Bricker's assertion. Bricker said in his letter cooperatives should be encouraged in the housing field, but he did not like the Administration's way of going about it.

The Banking Committee voted Feb. 22 against calling Marriner S. Eccles, Federal Reserve Board member, to testify on the entire federal housing program. The motion to call Eccles was made by Fulbright and was defeated by a 7-6 vote after heated debate within the committee. Chairman Maybank called the Committee into closed session that same day to consider a substitute measure favored by Sens. Tobey and Ives.

The committee voted down the Tobey - Ives substitute bill 6-7 after the National Housing Conference criticized it as "no middle - income housing bill at all". For the substitute were Ives, Tobey, Homer Capehart (R Ind.), John W. Bricker (R Ohio), J. William Fulbright (D Ark.) and A. Willis Robertson (D Va.). Against it were Burnet R. Maybank (D S. C.), Glen H. Taylor (D Idaho), John J.

Sparkman (D Ala.), J. Allen Frear Jr. (D Del.), Paul H. Douglas (D Ill.), Russell B. Long (D La.) and Ralph Flanders (R Vt.).

The Banking Committee approved the rewritten middle - income housing bill (S 2246) by a 9-4 vote Feb. 23.

As reported, the Banking group's bill had been scaled down from the $6 billion first asked by the Administration. Most of the controversy in the group had centered over a $2 billion request for direct loans for cooperative housing. The Committee cut the figure to $1.125 billion. Administration of the co-op program would be carried out by the Housing and Home Finance Agency, rather than a new co-op housing administration as called for in the original bill. Loans would go at about 3 1-4 per cent interest, according to Sparkman, author of the original bill.

Other provisions authorize $2 billion for repair and modernization of low-cost housing and for construction of low - cost housing for sale and rent; $150 million for veterans housing; $300 million for college housing; and $25 million for distribution of prefabricated housing. Of the total voted, $3.6 billion is new authorization. The bill amends the National Housing Act and extends to July 1, 1952, the expiration date of certain provisions.

On final vote for the bill, the lineup was: For the bill, Maybank, Taylor, Sparkman, Frear, Douglas, Long, Tobey, Flanders and Ives; against the bill, Fulbright, Robertson, Bricker and Capehart. Bricker, Capehart and Robertson signed a minority report.

European Report

Meanwhile, a report on cooperative housing in Europe was submitted by members of the Banking and Currency Committee Jan. 31. Five members had made a survey of co-op housing in Norway, Sweden, Denmark, Netherlands, France, Switzerland and Great Britain last year. On the trip were Maybank, chairman, Sparkman, Frear, Flanders and Bricker.

The report made no recommendations, but did praise the results of European cooperative housing. The following points were mentioned:

1. In almost every country the government has tried to keep rents under 20 per cent of family income.

2. Long amortization periods are the rule — up to 40 to 100 years.

3. Low interest is asked — as little as 1 per cent.

4. Subsidies, direct and indirect, have been necessary to keep rents low.

5. Housing units, even those 20-30 years old, are "modern in design and lay-out."

6. Housing research is given considerable attention.

The report concluded: "One of the most remarkable things about the whole story of housing in Europe today is that despite all the government subsidies, housing aids and advantages afforded to co-operatives and municipal housing agencies, private housing, assisted only in a small way and in some cases not at all, continues to make progress; and in most countries during the last year the volume of private construction has increased sharply."

Debate

The Senate passed its housing bill March 15 after striking out provisions for special insurance on loans to build cooperative housing. Final passage was on voice vote. As approved, the bill provided the following:

$1,750 million for mortgage insurance on home repair and construction; $400 million to insure multi-unit construction loans applied for prior to Feb. 1. This program had expired; $300 million for housing construction for educational institutions; $150 million for loans to veterans in areas where private financing is unavailable; transfer to local government of war housing projects; $250 million for suburban home mortgage insurance.

The bill presented to the Senate contained an Administration-backed $1 billion program of loan insurance for cooperative housing projects and most of the floor debate centered about this provision. It was removed by an amendment by Bricker on a roll call vote 43-38. Opposition came from Republicans and Southern Democrats. They claimed the bill would allow long-term co-op loans at about 3 1/4 per cent interest while veterans under other programs had to pay 4 to 4 1/2 per cent over shorter periods. This, they said, was discrimination.

Chairman Maybank of the Banking Committee, which reported the bill, offered a compromise amendment fixing a 4 per cent rate for co-op loans, but the amendment was not brought to a vote.

Principal debaters and their arguments were:

Maybank — ". . . those who will use (the co-op loan insurance) the most will be war veterans who have returned home and are now married and are living with their families but who unfortunately have no adequate place to live or which they themselves own. Under the bill they will be able to have two-room and/or three-room apartments in cooperatives, and will be able to raise their families in a way a good American is entitled to live." He introduced statements by American Legion and VFW officials backing the co-op program.

Fulbright — "I think the influence of this legislation, particularly, (the co-op loan insurance program) would be to make for much greater instability in the entire industry than there would be if we were to let it go along under the existing legislation."

Bricker — "It is unsound, it is fallacious, and I do not think the Senate intends to put its stamp of approval upon this kind of experimentation at this time when we are already building 1,000,000 homes, and one-half of them are under insurance provided in the VA and in the FHA programs."

Hubert H. Humphrey (D Minn.) — "There is a clear-cut need for more middle-income housing. The pending measure encourages the building industry and the lending industry to continue to meet the housing needs of middle-income groups or middle-income families. The bill in no way socializes housing . . . the bill in fact underwrites individual home ownership and promotes an interest on the part of the middle-income group in maintaining, owning and using their own housing facilities."

AMENDMENTS AGREED TO

Maybank — Authorize another $400 million for large-scale rental projects under a program which expired March 1. Loans applied for by Jan. 31 would be insured. Voice vote.

Bricker — Remove co-op housing section from bill. Roll call 43-38.

Long — Cut from 90 to 85 per cent the maximum insurance on the first $7,100 of each unit of multi-unit projects and raise from 60 to 70 per cent the maximum on all units over $7,100. Roll call 61-21.

eligible for certain insurance. Voice.

Maybank — Exempt GI Bill loans from certain provisions of the act. Voice.

Sparkman — Exempt individual mortgages covering individual units in cooperative projects from certain restrictions. Roll call 59-21.

Fulbright — Remove section providing $25 million for distribution of prefabricated housing. Voice.

HOUSE

Committee

Chairman Brent Spence (D Ky.) of the House Banking Committee introduced two housing bills when the session opened. HR 6618, introduced Jan. 6, called for a cooperative housing program similar to the one originally proposed by Sen. Maybank. Brent's second measure, HR 6742, introduced Jan. 12, contained amendments relating to the FHA mortgage insurance programs. It paralleled ground covered by the other original Maybank proposals.

The House Banking Committee opened hearings on the two Spence bills Jan. 30 with Raymond M. Foley, Housing and Home Finance Administrator, testifying. He supported both bills.

Foley said that private industry is not supplying sufficient low-income housing. Arguments to the contrary, he said, are based on "a fallacy resulting from the misuse of national averages"

"The fallacy. . .is that it balances off the low-cost homes. . .where prevailing construction costs and income levels are lower. . .and the climate is milder, against the housing needs of middle-income families in the higher cost-areas such as New York, Chicago, or Detroit," Foley said.

Present middle-income units, he said, are too small for families with children. Under the co-op housing bill, Foley said, a 4 1/2-room unit would rent for $64.67 a month, compared with $90.32 for such a privately-built unit financed with now-available government aid.

Franklin D. Richards, commissioner, Federal Housing Administration, told the committee that the bills provide special aids to families with children. Discrimination against them is specifically prohibited, he said.

AFL president William Green asserted that private builders "have failed to meet two simple housing tests: quantity and quality." He favored the Administration's middle-income housing program.

Rt. Rev. Msgr. John O'Grady, secretary of the National Conference of Catholic Charities, told the Committee he regards cooperatives as "one of the strongest bulwarks against a totalitarian or a socialist state." Private builders have been covering only a "part of the middle-income field," he said.

The two Spence bills were combined into one measure (HR 7402), also by Spence, Feb. 22 and reported favorably by 11-4 vote Feb. 23. The House Rules Committee approved the bill March 8 and sent it on to the House.

Debate

The House paralleled the action of the Senate in passing S 2246 on March 22. As did the Senate, the House removed all special aid provisions for cooperative housing projects but increased money available for other aid programs now in existence. Final approval came on a roll call vote 361-10.

The House removed a $2 billion aid to co-ops section on roll call 218-155 after opponents said the provision was "socialistic" and also "discriminatory" in its low interest rate. On passage the House bill (HR 7402) was given the Senate bill number (S 2246).

House debate also followed the pattern of the Senate's. Most controversy centered around the co-op direct aid provision — the money to be lent to cooperative housing projects through a special government corporation.

Critics said the co-op loans would go at about 3 1/2 per cent interest while others were paying 4 and 4 1/2 per cent interest on government-insured loans. Joseph Martin (R Mass.) said the provision "is nothing but another brick in the structure of socialism."

Eugene J. McCarthy (D Minn.) supported the co-op loans saying:

"First. It provides a means whereby middle-income families can secure adequate housing.

"Second. It involves no subsidy and a minimum of government interference.

"Third. It will stabilize the construction industry as it involves labor, building materials and investment.

"Fourth. Fundamentally it proposes self-help."

Banking Committee Chairman Spence tried to compromise by backing an amendment fixing the co-op loan interest rate at 4 per cent and another cutting the funds for the loans from $2 billion to $500 million. Both amendments, sponsored by Wright Patman (D Tex.), were rejected.

Then Jesse P. Wolcott (R Mich.) moved to strike out the entire co-op loan section. His motion carried first on a standing vote 174-122 and then on roll call 218-155. Eighty-one Democrats voted to kill co-op loans; 141 voted to keep them. Republicans opposed the loan 137-13.

Other provisions were accepted with little controversy, all but 10 Representatives approving the final bill.

Housing aid money voted by the House (in millions):

Frank M. Karsten (D Mo.) — Increase from 60 to 75 per cent the amount of the value of a home that can be mortgaged under the act; increase from $7,000 to $8,000 the value of the home upon which the percentage may be based (in effect, cutting down-payments from about 20 to 10 per cent of an $8,000 house). Voice.

Vito Marcantonio (ALP N. Y.) — Ban discrimination by reason of race, color, creed or national origin in insured housing units. Division 101-134; tellers 111-139.

CONFERENCE

The House-Senate conferees filed a report April 5 recommending compromise where House and Senate figures differed. The original bills and the final compromise called for the following authorizations (in millions):

	Original Senate	Original House	Final Compromise
FHA mortgage insurance	$1,750	$2,750	$2,250
FHA mortgage insurance for suburban homes	250	0	250
FHA mortgage insurance for large rental projects	400	600	500
FNMA mortgage purchase	0	750	250
Veterans direct loans	150	0	150
College direct loans	300	0	300
Totals	$2,850	$4,100	$3,700

Although the original House version of the bill did not contain three of the authorizations in the final bill, similar provisions appeared in a bill (HR 6070) passed by the House the first session but not acted on in the Senate. In HR 6070 was money for FHA mortgage insurance for suburban homes and an authorization for RFC loans for housing at colleges.

House approval came on voice vote the following day without opposition. The Senate agreed to the bill April 10 — also without controversy and on voice vote.

The compromise version, according to Sen. Maybank, chairman of the Senate Banking Committee, "puts great emphasis on low-cost housing by extending liberal terms to houses which will sell from $5,000 to $7,000. It also encourages the construction of larger size houses with three and four bedrooms by permitting higher mortgage ceilings on them."

LAW ENACTED

President Truman signed the legislation April 20 without comment. AFL President William Green, however, condemned the new law, pointing out the deletion of cooperative housing loan provisions. The bill became Public Law 475.

LOBBYING

Lobbying on housing bills started during the first session of the 81st Congress and continued into the second session. In 1950, pressure was directed toward the proposed low-interest, government - sponsored financing for housing cooperatives.

Groups representing the home building and banking industries said the aid to co-ops would amount to a "subsidy", would increase the national debt, "socialize" lending, and, further, wasn't necessary in order to provide for the "middle-income" housing market.

Labor groups and other backers of the Administration sponsored middle income measure said building and lending concerns hadn't been taking care of the housing shortage. Other charges were: New homes available to middle-income buyers are poor in "quality and quantity"; that "speculators" and home builders are profiting too much, at the expense of the nation's housing.

HOUSING STANDS

Seminar of the Convocation on the City Church — Resolved "that if at present adequate housing cannot be provided by private resources, it becomes the responsibility of Federal, State and local governments to make proper provision." Convocation in Columbus, Ohio, drew more than 400 delegates representing 32 Protestant denominations.

New Jersey State Federation of Labor — Endorsed Administration cooperative housing proposal as "sound and a definite contribution in the direction of better and more permanent housing". It denounced "reactionary tactics" of opponents of the legislation.

Eastern Cooperatives, Inc. — Termed the co-op housing bill "the greatest boost U. S. co-ops have had for a long time. Getting together to build homes, people can also get together to buy insurance, groceries, oil, credit facilities, clothing, and a dozen other necessities the co-op way." The endorsement, in The Cooperator, referred to HR 6618 and S 2246, with the Maybank cooperative housing amendment.

National Conference on Middle Income Housing — Initiated by AFL, CIO, and IAM consisted of some 30 member organizations at time of its meeting in Washington, Feb. 23, 24. Delegates from 30 other groups attended, also supporting cooperative housing legislation. Spokesmen for labor, veterans, church, consumer, women's and minority race organizations attended. Sixteen states were represented.

Conference heard message from President Truman endorsing the middle-income housing bill as a help in the "still serious shortage" of homes, a yardstick for building operations, and a boost to dispersion of industry.

Delegates visited Congressmen in support of co-op housing. Lawmakers received letters containing a conference resolution advocating the home building legislation.

LABOR PREPARES ARGUMENTS

How advocates of co-op housing financed under proposed legislation could defend their case against two arguments of opponents was outlined in League Reporter of AFL Labor's League for Political Education.

1. To the assertion the proposal is inflationary the Reporter said: "If it's inflationary to encourage the construction of about 250,000 homes at prices workers can afford (which the legislation contemplates), isn't it also inflationary to spend more than $1 billion (which the Federal Government plans to do in the next fiscal year) to aid private housing?"

2. Regarding the comment of Sen. John W. Bricker (R Ohio) that the bill contains "'possibilities for political favoritism," the Reporter said. "As to Bricker's remark, the best comment is a belly laugh. . . ."

The Reporter urged readers to write Congressmen about the housing bill because it "is in danger". The AFL paper also suggested unionists tell Congressmen "the interests of millions of U. S. workers are more important to the welfare of America than the wishes of a handful of grasping mortgage bankers and real estate lobbyists". The labor publication said Sens. J. William Fulbright (D Ark.), Homer Capehart (R Ind.), Bricker and other "anti-co-op Senators" want "more time for the real estate lobby to work up its smear campaign against the program".

CRITICISM OF BILL

Opponents of the middle - income housing proposals sent Congressmen lists of objections and in some cases lengthy analyses of the bills and their economic effects.

Chamber of Commerce of the United States cited these "adverse effects upon home-owners, savers and taxpayers" if the proposals become law:

1. Disadvantage to the "self-supporting home buyer" whose purchase is financed under terms more costly than those proposed for cooperative housing.

2. Threat to financial stability of "thousands" of new rental projects.

3. Inflationary effect.

4. Increase federal debt "in effect" by $2 billion.

5. "Unfair competition" to present lending concerns.

Fort Worth Chamber of Commerce — Resolved HR 6618 and S 2246 should be defeated as they would provide "government housing for middle-income families".

"It is highly improbable that the upper one-third can long carry a tax burden adequate to subsidize the other two-thirds of the homeowners of America," said the Texas organization.

Besides "subsidizing" on terms with which "private industry cannot compete", the bill would "create a new Federal bureau with its thousands of employees" and would deprive local governments of taxes.

"The present situation justifies less, not more housing legislation," said the Chamber. "Given an opportunity, private capital and private industry will house our people."

Loan League Stand

United States Savings and Loan League — Called for defeat of the cooperative housing amendment to S 2246 because: (1) It amounts to "government housing", (2) creates a new bureau, (3) involves "subsidy" for middle income people, (4) sets up "uneconomic" loan terms which "no private lender can meet", (5) provides "government competition, controlled from Washington . . . which is obnoxious locally", (6) would deter private building and financing, (7) is "extremely inflationary" (8) provides "concealed, unchecked federal expenditure" in the issuance of government-guaranteed obligations up to $2 billion.

Mortgage Bankers Association of America — In a 15 page analysis of housing credit problems, said the special postwar housing problems "have been eased due to the combined efforts of government and industry." The total housing demand "has by no means been met", said MBAA, but its characteristics are now more "normal" than "special", and any solution should be a long-range one.

Objective of 1950 housing legislation should be "dependable, long term methods of finance" and a turning away from "a debilitating and unobtainable dependence on government," said MBAA.

The bankers group thus urged "restoring the responsibilities of private investment" instead of "adopting the more generous government aids and supports such as the direct loans to cooperatives and to individual veterans that are advocated in pending legislation".

MBAA listed these "remedies for the current problems":

1. Remove "disabilities" affecting Veterans Administration housing loans by standardizing VA and Federal Housing Administration loan procedures and equalizing FHA and VA interest.

2. Create authority for private national mortgage association.

XUM

3. Limit operation of the Federal National Mortgage Association (Fannie Mae). FNMA "as now constituted is a grave obstacle to the creation of a sound, long range system of mortgage finance", stated the MBAA report.

Mortgage Firm Planned

MBAA announced plans for a private mortgage purchasing corporation to buy GI and FHA home loans. It would enter the mortgage buying field now handled by FNMA.

R. O. Deming, Jr., MBAA president, said success of the plan would counteract "the threat of the Government becoming a direct lender in this field, a development which would mean the beginning of socialization of the industry".

Legislative changes necessary to put the plan into effect, Deming said, included authorization of the lending corporation to have a capital stock of at least $2 million and to issue notes up to 40 times the capital stock and surplus.

"There is ample mortgage money in the country to meet all legitimate needs and the industry can supply it provided certain handicaps are removed and other changes made," Deming said.

NAHB Cites Stand

National Association of Home Builders of the United States — In Washington Letter quoted Rodney M. Lockwood, NAHB president, "We are not, and have never, been, opposed to housing cooperatives as such . . . groups of individuals acting cooperatively to do that which they could do individually. . .However, such groups as a class should not be provided, directly or indirectly, with government subsidies or special financing or tax devices available only to them and not freely available to all other citizens or forms of business enterprise."

Further, Lockwood said, the cooperative financing proposal contains "highly undesirable, and we believe dangerous, proposals which should not be confused with the legitimate encouragement of cooperatives". The proposal puts the government into the mortgage lending business, would conflict with FHA and VA housing programs, and "is not necessary to house the middle income third", asserted Lockwood.

American Bankers Association — Opposed the bill providing special financing for cooperatives. William A. Reckman, representing ABA, told the Senate Banking subcommittee the bill "seeks to favor special groups of borrowers".

NAHB president, Rodney M. Lockwood, called for a Congressional investigation of "the success or failure of housing cooperatives throughout the country before voting on a spending measure to subsidize cooperative housing."

Cooperatives in the United States "generally failed miserably" to do as good a job of providing housing as privately sponsored projects, Lockwood claimed. In "virtually every case, if the books were examined, co-op housing would be shown up as a poor risk" he said.

EUROPEAN REPORT REACTION

While five members of the Banking and Currency Committee praised the results of co-op housing in Norway, Sweden, Denmark, Netherlands, France, Switzerland and Great Britain (See P 160), building industry spokesmen expressed a different point of view.

Mortgage Bankers Association of America released a report by Samuel E. Neel on co-op housing in Sweden, which said, "Its (co-op housing) financing is so complicated with special interest rates and subsidies that a measure of its economic advantage, if any, could hardly be measured in competition with unaided private enterprise building."

National Association of Home Builders in Home Building News said, "The United States has no need to resort to the socialistic patterns which numerous European countries have turned to in their desperate need for housing."

Ideological Angles

Aside from economic factors of the cooperative housing phase of proposed legislation, ideological considerations brought both objections and endorsements.

As National Association of Home Builders of the United States saw it, in Washington Letter, "Both the House and Senate are moving along in a leisurely fashion on housing legislation but underneath the surface a bitter ideological struggle takes place. Proposals for collectivist cooperatives and the solution of the FNMA (Federal National Mortgage Association) problem, are the cause of bitter debate and uncertainty of action."

Further, the Letter, sent to lawmakers, asserted ". . . the current clamor to adopt the semi-socialized methods of other countries can only be interpreted as an effort to charge our entire political economy by starting with changing our housing economy"

On the other hand, David L. Krooth of the National Housing Conference, Inc., told the House Banking and Currency Committee the Administration measure combines "good old American principles of initiative and self-help, with the economies of large-scale development and better private financing".

Sen. Ralph E. Flanders (R Vt.) told the Senate Banking and Currency Committee, ". . . I have felt that the cooperative movement was the American alternative to the individual private business setup of our industry and distributing organizations, and all the rest, rather than straight socialism or communism or any other form of it. It is the alternative, it is the American alternative."

"Squeeze Play" Claimed

NAREB Headlines saw a "familiar squeeze play" shaping up in strategy of proponents of co-op housing aid to get Congressional approval of the middle income housing bill. The realtors' publication said Sen. John J. Sparkman (D Ala.), pushing the Administration housing plan, is opposed to temporary extension of FHA laws.

Thus, "Proponents will oppose any attempt to separate the sugarcoating of FHA expansion provisions from the over-all housing bill with its bitter pill of government lending, being fought by the industry," contended NAREB.

"Thus the advocates hope to dull the opposition and gain their goal. The current issue of The CIO News tips the hand bluntly, 'Administration supporters had hoped to report the bill in one piece, perhaps thus rousing extra support for the co-op section.' "

Ralph W. Gwinn, in a "Paul Revere Message" of Committee for Constitutional Government, said it was a "sorry example" when representatives of "great American banking houses said they had 'no opinions' and 'no convictions' about socialized government housing." In their statements during Congress' first session banking spokesmen "by negative suggestion" favored "socialized housing instead of free housing," Gwinn said.

"So, Wall Street has helped to kill private property rights and free enterprise in housing — the only possible source of adequate housing. Now at the conventions, they memorialize about free enterprise but don't back up their words.

"I believe they have been anaesthetized by government propaganda," Gwinn continued.

Growth of Lobby

Growth of a real estate lobby was summed up in NAHB's 363rd Washington Letter since 1942. "The history of your Local and National Associations is portrayed through the constant and difficult struggle with priorities, allocations, the ridiculous Wyatt period, and the challenging problems of producing post-war homes for veterans," wrote Frank W. Cortright of NAHB.

"We have grown, step by step, from a small band of men with a dream of an organized industry to one of the largest and most powerful organizations of its type in the political arena of Washington — the work of hundreds of builders who have contributed unselfishly of their time and energy. NAHB stands today as the answer of an aroused industry faced with criticism, controls and Federal competition.

". . . Only through our powerfully organized activity and constant contact with other segments of the industry, the Congress and with the agencies of government can we survive as a free industry."

Social Security Act

HR 6000—P. L. 734

SUMMARY

President Truman on Aug. 28, 1950, signed into law a major piece of his legislative program, the Social Security Act Amendments of 1950 granting social security to 10 million more persons and increasing existing benefits by 70 to 100 per cent. It was the first comprehensive change in the original Social Security Act providing coverage for about 35 million persons since enactment of that bill in 1935.

HR 6000 was endorsed in final conference form by the House Aug. 16, 1950, and by the Senate Aug. 17, climaxing nearly two years of Congressional work on the legislation.

The House Ways and Means Committee had wrestled with the social security legislation during much of the first session of the 81st Congress. The House itself approved the bill Oct. 5, 1949. (For provisions and an account of action on the measure, see CQ Almanac, Vol. V, p. 288 ff.)

The Senate buckled down to a study of HR 6000 as soon as the second session got under way Jan. 3, 1950. After nearly five months, the Finance Committee May 17 favorably reported legislation that differed in many major respects from the House-passed bill. The Senate went to work on it and passed it, substantially as the Committee had worked it out, on June 20, by the overwhelmingly favorable vote of 81 to 2. The only two "no" votes were cast by Sens. Hugh Butler (R Neb.) and Harry P. Cain (R Wash.).

Before finally passing the bill, the Senate adopted by voice vote a resolution (S Res 300) which partially satisfied the Republican-backed objective of a universal, pay-as-you-go security plan. The resolution authorized a two-year study by an appointed group of Senators of the possibilities for such a plan.

Truman Comments

Though he signed the bill and hailed it as a "major accomplishment" of the 81st Congress, President Truman expressed objection to it on two counts. They were:

1. The inclusion of the so-called Knowland amendment — named for its sponsor, Sen. William F. Knowland (R Calif.) — which changed the Social Security Act's provision governing federal grants to state unemployment compensation funds. Requiring a 90-day notice to states found in non-compliance with federal standards on unemployment insurance, the amendment further bars the withholding of federal grants to that state until final state court review decides the validity of the federal finding. Originated in the Senate, this provision had been agreed to after some controversy by the House.

2. The omission of what the President termed "urgently" needed social security benefits for totally or permanently disabled workers. The House had included such benefits, but agreed to leave them out at the insistence of the Senate, substituting instead a relief program for the needy disabled.

Mr. Truman criticized the Knowland amendment saying he feared workers might be denied unemployment insurance if they "refuse to accept employment at substandard wages or working conditions." As for the disabled insurance program, the President said he would continue to press for its adoption.

Provisions

The new law made 30 major changes in the original Social Security Act.

OLD-AGE AND SURVIVORS INSURANCE PROGRAM

HR 6000 made 22 major changes in this — the central — phase of the law:

1. Extension of coverage to self-employed persons whose income is at least $400. Omitted from coverage were self-employed farmers, physicians, lawyers, dentists, osteopaths, chiropractors, optometrists, Christian Science practitioners, naturopaths, professional engineers, veterinarians, architects, funeral directors, or certified, full-time practicing public accountants.

2. Coverage of regularly employed agricultural and processing workers. ("Regularly employed" means a worker employed on a full-time basis for at least 60 days a calendar quarter, with cash wages of at least $50.)

3. Coverage of regularly employed domestic workers ("Regularly employed" here means a person working for a single employer at least 24 days in a calendar quarter, with cash wages of at least $50 in the quarter.)

4. Coverage of state and local government employes not members of retirement systems, after voluntary agreement between state and federal government, and compulsory coverage of employes of transit systems taken over by states or local governments after 1936.

5. Voluntary coverage of employes of non-profit organizations at the option of employer and employes.

6. Coverage of federal employes not covered by retirement systems.

7. Coverage of employes and self-employed persons in Puerto Rico and the Virgin Islands.

8. Coverage of Americans employed outside the U. S. by an American employer.

9. Inclusion as "employes" for coverage purposes of all persons having employe status under the usual common-law rules, plus these others: Full-time insurance salesmen, certain agent - drivers, full - time traveling salesmen and industrial homeworkers.

10. Liberalization of the benefit formula to provide higher payments to future beneficiaries.

11. Rearrangement of the tax schedule to permit continuation of the present 1.5 per cent rate through 1953. Beginning in 1954, the rate will be 2 per cent, 2.5 per cent after 1960, 3 per cent after 1965 and 3.25 per cent in 1970 and thereafter.

12. Elimination of the "increment factor" or the increase in benefits for years or contributions to the insurance program.

13. Liberalization of the method of computing the "average monthly wage" which determines the insurance benefit.

14. Increase in the wage base for tax and benefit purposes from $3,000 to $3,600.

15. A substantial increase in benefits for current beneficiaries, averaging 77.5 per cent.

16. Liberalization of the eligibility provisions, to make it easier for persons to qualify for benefits.

17. Payment of benefits to dependent husbands and widowers of insured women workers.

18. Liberalization of survivors insurance benefits with respect to insured married women.

19. Increase in the benefits for dependent parents, and for the first child in a family, from 50 per cent to 75 per cent of the primary insurance benefit.

20. Payment of the lump-sum death benefit in all cases of insured deceased workers.

21. Increase in the amount a beneficiary may earn in covered employment without loss of benefits from $14.99 to $50, and elimination of the retirement test at age 75.

22. Provision of wage credits of $160 for each month of military service during World War II.

PUBLIC ASSISTANCE PROGRAMS

Five major changes were made in the assistance programs which supplement the present social security insurance plan:

1. Provision for federal grants to the states for the needy permanently and totally disabled.

2. Inclusion in aid-to-dependent-children program of one adult relative in a family, his benefit to involve federal matching.

3. Provision for mandatory exemption of $50 earned income for the blind, beginning July, 1952.

4. Extension of federal grants for public assistance programs in Puerto Rico and the Virgin Islands.

5. Provision for federal grants to aid-to-the-blind programs in Pennsylvania, Missouri and Nevada until July 1, 1955. (These states do not conform to the requirements of the federal law concerning determination of need.)

OTHER PROGRAMS

Four other major changes were made in the original Social Security Act, as follows:

1. Increase in federal grants for maternal and child health aid from $11 million to $16.5 million annually (except that for fiscal 1951 the grant would be $15 million); for crippled children, from $7.5 million to $15 million (for present fiscal year, $1 million); and for child welfare services, from $3.5 million to $10 million.

2. Require utilization of "facilities and experience of voluntary agencies" in development of child welfare program.

3. Continuation for two additional years of the federal loan fund for state unemployment insurance funds which run low.

4. The Knowland provision for review by state courts of administrative decisions involving individual unemployment insurance cases prior to ruling by the Secretary of Labor that such decisions do not conform to federal unemployment insurance law.

Votes

The House passed HR 6000 Oct. 5, 1949, by a 333-14 roll call vote.

The Senate passed the measure June 20, 1950, by a roll-call vote of 81 to 2.

The conference report on the legislation carried, 374 to 1, in the House Aug. 16, 1950, after the membership had refused, 188 to 186, to send the bill back to conference for elimination of the disputed Knowland amendment.

The Senate endorsed the conference report Aug. 17, 1950, by voice vote.

Party Stands

The 1948 Democratic Platform supported this plank: "Increases in old-age and survivors' insurance benefits by at least 50 percent and reduction of the eligibility age for women from 65 to 60 years; extension of old-age and survivors' and unemployment insurance to all workers not now covered; insurance against loss of earnings on account of illness or disability; improved public assistance for the needy."

The 1948 Republican Platform read: "We urge . . . extension of the federal old - age and survivors' insurance program and increase of the benefits to a more realistic level."

BACKGROUND

Pursuant to a resolution directing the Senate Finance Committee "to make a full and complete investigation" of social security legislation, an advisory council was appointed in 1947 — during the 80th Congress — by the then - Chairman Eugene D. Millikin (R Colo.) to make recommendations on revising social security program. The council made its recommendations in 1948. It recommended coverage for most of the working population not otherwise covered by retirement programs, benefits about twice as high as provided under the original program, benefits for disabled workers, plus higher public assistance payments and unemployment insurance.

Congress did not act on these recommendations in 1948. The only action taken was on two measures prohibiting the extension of social security to door-to-door salesmen, some life insurance agents, piece workers in the home, and news and periodicals vendors. President Truman vetoed both bills, but Congress overrode his veto, and thereby enacted P.L. 642 (80th Cong.) and P.L. 492 (80th Cong.) as the only new social security statutes of the year. Sponsored by Rep.

Bertrand W. Gearhart (R Calif.) the legislation grew out of a Treasury Department interpretation of a Supreme Court ruling making these groups eligible for coverage under the social security program (CQ Almanac, Vol. IV, pp. 143-44.)

The President said the Gearhart proposals raised "the fundamental question of whether or not we shall maintain the integrity of our social security system." In a message to Congress in May, 1948, the President recommended a 50 per cent increase in average monthly benefits for retired workers and survivors and dependents, extension of coverage to 20 million presently excluded, a $4,800 ceiling on earnings subject to the tax, broader unemployment insurance coverage, coverage for disability and higher payroll deductions.

But the proposals were discarded and only one social security revision was attempted: HR 6777 (80th Cong.), sponsored by Rep. Daniel A. Reed (R N. Y.) which won House approval June 14, 1948. It would have added 3.5 million more persons to the social security rolls, primarily those working for non - profit organizations and state and local governments. The Senate did not act on the Reed bill.

The House Ways and Means Commitee started a study on Feb. 28, 1949, of the entire social security program, with a view to extending both coverage and benefits. Its hearings and executive sessions, among the most extensive in Congressional annals, lasted nearly six months. Original drafts of legislation sponsored by the administration were considerably modified, reintroduced as HR 6000, and reported by the Committee Aug. 22.

Sponsored by Chairman Robert L. Doughton (D N. C.), the revised bill extended coverage of old - age and survivors insurance to 11.3 million more persons, increased benefits to those now receiving them by 70 per cent and to future retirants by about 100 per cent, provided the same benefits for permanent disability as for retirement, gave wage credits of $160 a month to veterans in service during the Second World War, boosted pay roll deductions to finance the program made the maximum taxable wage $3,600, provided some increase in public assistance and included the permanently disabled in this category.

The House passed this measure HR 6000 Oct. 5, 1949, by a 333-14 roll-call vote. It had previously rejected a substitute bill, HR 6297 offered by Rep. Robert W. Kean (R N. J.) by a 113-232 roll call vote. Kean had claimed that his bill would cover 1.3 million more workers, provide higher benefits for the lower income groups and irregularly employed workers, reduce "unfair discrimination" against older workers, and save American taxpayers an average of $1.25 billion annually.

(For full account of provisions of House bill, see CQ Almanac, Vol. V. p. 288 ff. For comparison of House bill provisions with provisions of Senate bill and conference report, passed in 1950, see p. 171 of this story.)

SENATE

Hearings

Even before the second session of the 81st Congress was convened, Chairman Walter F. George (D Ga.), of the Senate Finance Committee, sent out information to committee members comparing amendments proposed in the House bill with the then-existing Social Security Act.

On Jan. 17, two weeks after the session began, the Committee's public hearings were opened. They continued for more than two months. In that time scores of witnesses representing hundreds of organizations appeared to register a stand on HR 6000 or some phase of it. No single piece of legislation in the entire 81st Congress attracted more lobby attention than did the social security bill.

A detailed account of lobby and organization stands and testimony of individuals during the lengthy hearings may be found on page 213. (For a summary of 1949 lobby stands on HR 6000 when it was before the House, see CQ Almanac, Vol. V, pp. 290-292)

Committee

Chairman George closed the hearings March 28 and announced the Committee would take up the bill in closed session on April 3. This schedule was adhered to, but it was more than another month before the Committee finally got the bill into shape.

320-Page Report

The Committee gave its approval to the bill May 17. Sen. Hugh Butler (R Neb.) was the only member of the 13-man committee to vote against the legislation. He later submitted a minority report. Two Administration leaders on the Committee, Scott W. Lucas (D Ill.) and Francis J. Myers (D Pa.) said they voted for the bill but would seek on the floor to liberalize some of its provisions.

On May 25, the Committee formally submitted a final draft of the revised measure to the Senate, together with a 320-page report explaining its contents.

Urging adoption of the amended bill, the Committee said the old social security system had been "completely unbalanced" by economic changes in the last decade. Enactment of the bill, the report went on, would be "a very significant step forward" but would still leave some major problems unsolved. It recommended that further study be given to public assistance phases of the social security system and "to other problems not solved by the bill" so that within the next year or two "a sound social security system . . . can be put into full operation."

Other Views

Sen. Butler's minority report urged the Senate to reject the bill. He declared the social security system is "substantially unworkable". He contended a study of fundamental changes should be made before anything further were done to perpetuate it. Butler proposed "careful examination" of the possibilities of a "universal flat-rate pension system which may be financed on a strictly pay-as-you-go basis."

Scott W. Lucas (D Ill.) and Francis J. Myers (D Pa.) submitted a supplemental statement in which they urged greater liberalization of benefits than provided in the bill. They also pledged themselves to press for adoption of the plan to provide insurance for totally and permanently disabled workers.

Bill

As it came from the Committee, HR 6000 was in major respects a different bill from the one the House had sent to the Senate the previous session.

These were the principal Senate provisions:

OLD-AGE AND SURVIVORS INSURANCE

1. Coverage

Coverage was extended to another 9,900,000 persons, in comparison with the additional 11,300,000 the House had wanted brought under the system. Compulsory coverage was voted for 8.3 million, while coverage on a voluntary basis was given the remainder.

Here is a comparison of the coverage figures as written into the House Bill and revised by the Senate Finance Committee. Figures in parentheses are subtotal figures.

CATEGORY	HOUSE	SENATE COMMITTEE
Nonfarm self-employed	4,500,000	5,000,000
Agricultural workers	200,000	1,000,000
Borderline employment	(200,000)	(200,000)
Regularly employed on farm	.....	(800,000)
Domestic workers	950,000	1,000,000
Employes of nonprofit org.	600,000	600,000
Compulsory coverage	(600,000)	(400,000)
Voluntary coverage	.....	(200,000)
Employes of State and local governments	3,800,000	1,400,000
Voluntary, not under a retirement system	(1,400,000)	(1,400,000)
Voluntary, under a retirement system	(2,400,000)	.....
Federal civilian employes under a retirement system	100,000	200,000
Employes outside the U. S.	150,000	150,000
Employment in Puerto Rico & Virgin Islands	350,000	400,000
New definition of "employe"	650,000	150,000
Total under compulsory coverage	7,500,000	8,300,000
Total under voluntary coverage	3,800,000	1,600,000
	11,300,000	9,900,000

The Committee also made changes within these categories, as follows:

a. Self - employed: Agreed to cover self - employed persons making at least $400 a year, except farmers, doctors, dentists, osteopaths, chiropractors, naturopaths, Christian Science practitioners, optometrists, veterinarians, lawyers, certified public accountants, architects and professional engineers.

b. Agricultural workers: Extended coverage, as the House did, to border - line agricultural workers and added coverage also for any agricultural worker who earned $50 with an employer in a calendar quarter and was employed by that employer for at least 60 days of either that quarter or the previous quarter.

c. Domestic workers: Covered these if a domestic was in a private home and working for a single employer at least 24 days in a calendar quarter with cash wages of at least $50 for that quarter (House had stipulated coverage if employment had been for 26 days and wages had been $25).

d. Employes of non - profit organizations: Removed from House - approved compulsory coverage about 200,000 employes of religious organizations, providing instead a plan of voluntary coverage for these persons.

e. State and local government employes: Covered only if not under a retirement system.

f. New definition of "employee": Retained definition of employe based on common law, designating in addition these persons for coverage as "employes": full - time life insurance salesmen, certain agent drivers and officers of corporations. (The Committee thus decided that other persons designated as employes in the House bill should get coverage as self-employed.)

g. Tips and gratuities: Exempted from social security taxes, whereas the House would have taxed them.

Finally, this portion of the bill made coverage changes effective Jan. 1, 1951.

2. Liberalization of Benefit Amounts

a. Current beneficiaries: About 2.9 million persons already receiving old-age and survivors insurance benefits, under the Committee bill, got their monthly benefits increased by about 85 to 90 per cent. The average primary benefit of approximately $25 per month for currently retired workers was increased to about $48.

b. Future beneficiaries: A stepped-up formula for computing insurance benefits was provided so that persons retiring or dying in the future might get 90 to 100 per cent greater benefits than the old law gave. Under it, the individual insurance amount, computed on the basis of the average monthly wage during the time of coverage, would be 50 per cent of the first $100, plus 15 per cent of the next $150. The increment factor — giving a beneficiary 1/2 per cent additional for each year of coverage — was eliminated.

c. Average monthly wage: Computed on the same basis as under the old law, with total wages divided by total months of coverage.

3. Eligibility for Benefits

a. Fully - insured status: Committee provided full insurance status for any persons covered, at the time of death or retirement, for a total of one - half the number of quarters after 1950, with a minumum of six quarters required. The Committee permitted quarters of coverage acquired before 1950 to be included. It called this the "new start" provision, saying it gave older workers a better chance to qualify under the social security program.

4. Benefit Categories

a. Disability insurance: Eliminated by the Committee.

b. Dependent children of women workers: Benefits for children of insured married women who die were provided by the Committee even though the father continued to live.

c. Dependent husbands: Committee added a new category of beneficiaries, dependent husbands of deceased insured women workers.

d. Amount beneficiaries permitted to earn: Committee agreed to increase the permissible earnings of a beneficiary from $14.99 to $50 a month. After age 75, furthermore, the benefits were made payable regardless of earnings.

5. Veterans

World War II veterans were granted wage credits of $160 a month for the time spent in service between Sept. 16, 1940, and July 24, 1947.

6. Effective Date of Benefits

Set for the second month following the date of enactment.

7. Financing

a. Wage base: Total earnings on which social security taxes were made applicable was left as it had been at $3,000, instead of the House's $3,600.

PUBLIC ASSISTANCE

B. Tax rate: Comparison of the tax rates follows:

Original Law	House	Senate Committee
to '49: 1 %	'50 1½%	'50-'55: 1½%
'50-'51: 1½%	'50-'59: 2 %	'56-'59: 2 %
'51 and after: 2 %	'60-'64: 2½%	'60-'64: 2½%
	'65-'69: 3 %	'65-'69: 3 %

Old-age assistance

State supplementary old-age assistance payments would be shared in by the federal government only on a 50-50 basis in those cases where the worker becomes a social security beneficiary after the effective date of the bill.

Aid to dependent children

Maximum benefits in which federal government would share were increased from $27 to $30 a month and from $18 to $20 for each additional child, with the contribution schedule — 3/4 of the first $12, plus 1/2 of the remainder — left at the same level as set in the old law. The House had altered the federal contribution schedule upward.

Aid to the blind

Beginning July, 1952, under the Committee bill, all states administering the aid-to-the-blind programs were required to disregard earned income up to $50 per month in determining eligibility of claimants.

Direct payment for medical aid

States were authorized to make direct payments to doctors or others furnishing medical care for public assistance recipients. Previous law required payments to be made directly to recipients.

Medical institutions

The Committee authorized federal sharing of the costs of medical attention for needy aged and blind recipients in public medical institutions, in comparison with the original law which permitted sharing only in cases of private institutions.

SERVICE PROGRAMS FOR CHILDREN

Child-welfare services

The authorization for federal-state cooperative child-welfare services was increased from $3.5 million to $12 million a year.

Maternal and child-health services

The authorized federal grants for these purposes were increased from $11 million to $20 million a year.

Services for crippled children

The authorization for these services was increased from $7.5 million to $15 million a year.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

The provision of the Social Security Act allowing federal advances to the accounts of the states in the federal unemployment trust fund set up for them was reenacted for a two-year period. This provision in the original law had expired Jan. 1, 1950.

Debate

The Senate began debate June 13 on the Committee-amended HR 6000. Senators agreed to start to take the final vote on the measure June 20.

In presenting the bill to the Senate, Chairman George of the Finance Committee told his colleagues it would "provide reasonable social security through contributory social insurance" to additional millions of aged citizens and their survivors "without subjecting them to the humiliation of a need test or having the amount of their payments depend upon the state or community in which they may reside." It would, he said, reverse the trend toward providing more federal, state and local public assistance, rather than relying on old-age and survivors insurance.

Support for the legislation seemed to be overwhelmingly bipartisan following a meeting of the Senate Republican Policy Committee June 14. At that time, Sen. Eugene D. Millikin (R Colo.), committee chairman and ranking minority member of the Finance Committee, indicated the GOP would support the legislation almost to a man. Republicans also urged support for further study of the whole social security setup for the purpose of working out universal coverage to be financed on a pay-as-you-go basis.

Millikin pointed out that the pending revision was the first comprehensive change in the law since it was first enacted in 1935, although some previous changes had been made. Dissatisfaction with the original legislation, he said, should not lead to its abandonment "without an instantly ready and acceptable alternative." But he predicted continuing changes in the program during the next decade, leading eventually to a "truly-pay-as-you-go system with universal coverage" for all persons 65 years of age or over.

Sen. Robert A. Taft (R Ohio) agreed with Millikin and said he would work for the "universal coverage" idea.

But Sen. Hugh Butler (R Neb.) proposed scrapping the present system. He called HR 6000 a "crazy maze" which is "unjust, uneconomic and undemocratic." If it passes, he predicted, "we are on the road to bankruptcy." He proposed instead a program including more workers financed entirely by income tax levies instead of the pay roll taxes and deductions now used.

Sen. William Benton (D Conn.) urged adoption of "liberalizing amendments" to cover even greater numbers of people than HR 6000 included, and to bring its benefits "more in line with present-day living standards." He said there was no conflict between "the goals of an expanding economy under free enterprise" and "the objectives of social security for all the American people."

Sen. Claude Pepper (D Fla.) spoke at length against the "arbitrary" adoption of $3,000 as the maximum tax base, but said he was strongly in favor of the measure anyway. "If we are to have anything like adequate social security," he declared, "we must not only broaden the coverage, but we must also raise the tax base and approach more closely the just principle of taxation, of payment according to ability to pay." Pepper commented favorably on the Townsend old-age pension plan and said it proposed a taxation schedule —three per cent of monthly income above $250 — more in line with ability to pay.

One of the bill's few opponents, Sen. Harry P. Cain (R Wash.) also proposed scrapping the social security system entirely and working out a pay-as-you-go plan. Cain described the system as "complex beyond endurance", "inordinately costly" and tending to "center bureaucratic control in Washington".

Survey Authorized

After a week of debate, the Senate reached June 20, the date on which it had agreed to vote on HR 6000. But the first balloting came on a resolution (S Res 300) authorizing a two - year Senate study of ultimate universal coverage on a pay-as-you-go basis. This resolution was accepted by a voice vote.

The Senate then entered the final hours of floor action and debate on HR 6000. Senators began final voting on some 32 amendments, most of them designed to liberalize the bill further. All but a handful of the amendments were voted down. Only one major change was effected. The tax base was raised from the first

$3,000 of pay to the first $3,600, as provided in the House bill. The Senate Finance Committee at a meeting just prior to the final showdown, agreed to accept the increase — which it previously had turned down—and sponsor the amendment on the floor. Francis E. Myers (D Pa.) from the floor offered an amendment to the amendment to increase the taxable base to $4,200, but he was defeated on a roll-call vote, 36 to 45.

Disability Aid Votes

Notably missing from the Senate bill was the House provision for permanent and total disability insurance. Two attempts to reinsert it failed. A proposal by Russell B. Long (D La.) and Lester C. Hunt (D Wyo.) to establish an assistance program for needy disabled was defeated on a roll call, 41 to 42. A later effort to obtain reconsideration of this vote was shouted down. In the meantime, the Senate also turned down an attempt by Myers and Paul H. Douglas (D Ill.) to put the House provision in the Senate bill, but backed up with new safeguards. This was defeated by voice.

Myers (D Pa.) was joined by Lucas (D Ill.) in an unsuccessful effort to restore to the Senate bill the provision for increasing benefits for persons with longer coverage credit. Under the old law this increase had amounted to one percent of the earned benefit for each covered year. The House had cut this increment to 1/2 percent yearly, but the Senate eliminated it altogether, saying it discriminated against older workers who had no chance to gain lengthy coverage.

The Myers - Lucas amendment would have restored the provision as the House had envisaged it. But the proposal was turned down by voice vote. Also defeated were efforts to qualify state and local government employees now under a retirement system for Federal social security benefits. Even in the case of Wisconsin, which has a retirement system required by law to be gradually integrated with the Federal system, the Senate refused to authorize coverage.

Jobless Pay Change

A change in the policy governing Federal-aid unemployment insurance was adopted on motion of William F. Knowland (R Calif.). The Knowland amendment, voted by roll call, 45 to 37, curbed the power of the Federal government to cut off its contributions to unemployment funds of any state as a penalty for the state's noncompliance with Federal rulings. The Labor Secretary would be required to give the governor of a state 90 days' notice of finding of noncompliance, and even after expiration of the time, could not withhold funds until the highest state court had ruled on the question of the state's entitlement to benefits.

(The background on the Knowland amendment was this: Washington and California, during the maritime strike of 1949, withheld unemployment compensation in certain cases from maritime workers who had been unemployed before the strike. The Labor Secretary, holding these individuals were bona fide jobless, would have shut off unemployment insurance funds unless the state rulings were changed. The state then reversed its position.)

Final Action

After 3 1/2 hours of steady voting on the foregoing major amendments and others, the Senate took its final tally on the legislation. It passed HR 6000 by an 81-2 roll-call vote on June 20. Only Sens. Hugh Butler (R Neb.) and Harry P. Cain (R Wash.) balloted against the measure.

CONFERENCE

The revised and Senate-amended measure next went to a joint House-Senate conference. Conferees of the House were Reps. Robert L. Doughton (D N. C.), Wilbur D. Mills (D. Ark.), A. Sidney Camp (D Ga.), Daniel A. Reed (R N.Y.), Roy O. Woodruff (R Mich.), and Thomas A. Jenkins (R Ohio). Senate conferees were: Walter F. George (D Ga.), Tom Connally (D Tex.), Harry F. Byrd (D Va.), Eugene D. Millikin (R Colo.) and Robert A. Taft (R Ohio).

On July 25, the group reached tentative agreement on a final draft of HR 6000, after more than a month of reconciliation endeavors. On Aug. 1 they met and gave approval to their report, which had been delayed several days because of the printing process.

The compromise version of the bill finally produced by the conferees embodied most of the Senate-adopted provisions.

This meant that benefits for persons already receiving social security were increased by an average of 77 per cent, to a little higher level than the one the House had approved. The higher benefits voted for persons retiring in the future or dying were cut down, however, to the lower Senate-approved level.

The payroll tax to finance the benefits, left at 1.5 per cent for the present, was set to rise to 2 percent in 1954 and progressively thereafter over the next 20 years to a final 3.25 per cent.

Benefits under the House bill would have been greater because of the pioneering insurance feature to provide social security benefits for the permanently and totally disabled. This proposal was discarded in conference, in favor of another House provision providing Federal participation in state public assistance payments to the needy disabled. About 200,000 persons were deemed able to qualify for maximum $50-a-month benefits to which the Federal government would contribute between 60 and 75 percent.

Knowland Amendment Retained

Just before finishing up the draft, conferees agreed to retain in the bill the Knowland (R Calif.) amendment forbidding the Secretary of Labor to shut off unemployment compensation funds — which funds are provided under the social security program — to a state because of noncompliance with Federal law until judicial review has established whether or not that state actually has not complied, under the law, with Federal regulations governing unemployment funds.

Professions Excluded

The conference extended the insurance coverage to all self - employed persons earning $400 or more annually, with the exception of physicians, lawyers, dentists, osteopaths, veterinarians, chiropractors, optometrists, Christian Science practitioners, architects, naturopaths, funeral directors, professional engineers and certified registered, licensed or full-time practicing accountants. Those covered as self - employed would pay one - and - one - half - times the tax of an employee contributor. About 350,000 persons, including full-time wholesale salesmen and industrial home workers, whom the Senate had included for coverage under the "self - employed" category, got "employee" coverage, under the conference version of the bill. This meant they had to pay less social security tax, since the employer would also contribute.

Farm and Household Workers

The conferees also decided that regularly employed farm workers, to qualify for coverage, first must put in at least three months steady work for one employer, then work at least 60 days and earn at least $50 in the same employ during the next calendar quarter. Voluntary coverage was provided for employees of most non-profit organizations if their agencies agreed and if two thirds of the workers of an agency voted to be covered. Non - farm household workers serving one employer 24 days in a calendar quarter and earning at least $50 in that period were covered on a compulsory basis, while federal, state and municipal workers, not covered by other retirement systems, generally came under coverage.

Older Workers Qualified

To qualify older workers more quickly for benefits the conferees carried over the "new start" section adopted in the Senate. This provided payment of benefits to a worker who had at least six quarters of coverage after 1950 and before retirement at 65 or death. But such quarters might also have been earned at any time before 1951. Thus a person aged 62 on the effective date of the bill would be fully insured for benefits at the age of 65 if he had acquired six quarters of coverage at any time. Benefits were set on the basis of 50 percent of the first $100 of average wage, plus 15 per cent of the next $200.

Eliminated in conference was the so-called increment factor under which the House had voted to add 1/2% to the amount of the primary benefit for each year of coverage after 1950, as a reward for greater contributions to the system. The Senate said the increment was not needed, as its purpose was already accomplished under other terms of the bill, and the conference agreed. Benefits were made approximately the same for workers with the same income, whether they have been covered 5 years or 40.

Features Compared

The following tables and charts show a comparison of coverage, benefits, taxes and other principal provisions of the social security bill as approved by the House and Senate, and as finally agreed upon by conference:

Benefits

Here is the table showing how benefits were increased for persons now receiving them: (1)

Existing Benefit	House	Senate	Conference	Maximum (2) Family Benefit
$10	$25	$20	$20	$40
15	31	31	30	50
20	36	37	37	59

30	51	56	54	113
35	55	62	59.20	145
45	64	72	68.50	150

(1) The table represents the payment to a retired person who paid for insurance under the social security program. If such a retired person has a wife 65 or over, she gets a sum equal to one - half his benefit. The widow of an insured man, over 65 or with dependent children, gets three-quarters of his benefit. A deceased insured worker's children also get benefits—the first child three-quarters of the father's primary benefit, and each other child one - half.

(2) Same in House and Senate bills; therefore, remained the same in conference.

Illustrative monthly benefits for those who retire in future with five full years of coverage: (3)

150	56	58	58
200	62	65	65
250	67	72	72
300	72	..	80

(3) Single persons. Under terms of compromise, benefits are identical for persons covered in all possible years, whether the total coverage is 5 or 40 years, if they had same average wage. The House granted greater benefits for longer coverage, regardless of wage.

Conference Report Action

Final endorsements were stamped by the House on Aug. 16 and the Senate Aug. 17 on the compromise version of HR 6000. In the House, approval was voted overwhelmingly 374 to 1. The Senate approved the conference report by voice vote.

The crucial issue in the House was the Senate-adopted Knowland amendment restricting the Secretary of Labor's power to withhold federal unemployment compensation funds from the states. The conferees had retained the proposal in their final draft of the bill. This meant the House had to consider the Knowland amendment for the first time in conjunction with the conference report as a whole.

A group in the House, led by Majority Leader John W. McCormack (D Mass.) and Walter A. Lynch (D-N.Y.), wanted to re-open the conference and eliminate the amendment. But they were defeated — on a technical issue, the effect of which was to retain the disputed provision — on a roll-call vote, 188 to 186.

Background to the defeat was this: Lynch had prepared a motion to recommit the legislation with instructions to the conferees to eliminate the Knowland proposal and insert instead the House-adopted provision permitting social security payments to workers who become disabled before they are old enough to qualify for regular insurance benefits. The Senate and the conference committee had deleted this proposal.

McCormack attacked the Knowland amendments as "a destructive blow" to the unemployment compensation program. He said it was "done by two of the most vicious lobbyists in the country," but he did not name them. Lynch said advocates of the amendment were "enemies of labor". John D. Dingell (D Mich.) attributed pressure for the amendment to "state unemployment-insurance directors under the domination of organized groups of employers."

But on the other hand, Daniel A. Reed (R N.Y.) called the efforts to eliminate the amendment "a drive for centralized power for Washington bureaucrats." Another Republican, Roy O. Woodruff (Mich.), said the amendment "simply prevents intervention . . . in an issue under the law of a state until the courts have pronounced what the law is."

Surprise Move Made

Before Lynch actually had submitted his motion, a surprise move was made by John W. Byrnes (R-Wis.) to recommit the bill. Byrnes frankly acknowledged his motion was designed to head off the Lynch motion and save the Knowland amendment. Byrnes also had attached to his proposal certain instructions — he wanted the conferees to insist on a minor change in the bill' permitting Wisconsin state employes to supplement their own retirement fund with federal social security benefits. (The Senate and the conferees had previously turned this down).

Because only one motion to recommit any legislation is allowed in the House, Lynch had only one recourse open to him. That was to attempt to tie his own recommittal motion onto Byrnes', as an amendment to the latter.

But Lynch never did make such a gambit. Before he was able to do so, Chairman Robert L. Doughton (D N.C.), of the House Ways and Means Committee which wrote the original version of HR 6000, moved the "previous question" on the Byrnes motion. Doughton supported the Knowland amendment as "a states rights issue, pure and simple."

(Adoption of a "previous question" motion requires an immediate vote on the issue at hand, in this case the Byrnes' recommittal proposal, and precludes further debate and action on any amendments to it).

Doughton's motion was adopted, 188 to 186. The House then proceeded to defeat the Byrnes recommittal motion on a voice vote, and finally, to adopt the conference report, 374 to 1. Byrnes cast the lone negative vote. When offering his recommittal motion, he had, under House rules, to announce himself in opposition to the bill. He said his ethics prevented him from later turning around and voting for the bill.

In the Senate, adoption was forthright and prompt. After a brief discussion, the Senate Aug. 17 stamped its endorsement on the conference report and sent HR 6000 on to President Truman.

LAW ENACTED

President Truman Aug. 28 signed HR 6000 into public law. In a statement, the President declared:

"The passage of this legislation is an outstanding achievement. . . .

"By making it possible for most families to obtain protection through the contributory insurance system, and by increasing insurance benefits, the act will ultimately reduce dependence on public charity This kind of progressive, forward - looking legislation is the best possible way to prove that our democratic institutions can provide both freedom and security for all our citizens.

"We still have much to do before our Social Security programs are fully adequate . . . . Many more people still need to be brought into the old age and survivors insurance system. . . (We need) steps to strengthen our unemployment insurance system. . . We urgently need a system of insurance against loss of wages through temporary or permanent disability. . . I shall continue to urge action on this unfinished business.

"There is one very unfortunate feature in the new law. This is the so-called 'Knowland Amendment,' tacked on as a rider in the Senate. It may result in undermining the safeguards enacted by the Congress to protect workers against loss of unemployment insurance benefits if they refuse to accept employment at substandard wages or working conditions.

". . . .While other provisions of the bill were the product of thorough consideration in the committees of both houses, neither committee ever had an opportunity to hold hearings on the Knowland amendment. I trust that the Congress will reconsider this ill-advised provision and will act promptly to remove it from the social security laws."

LOBBY STANDS

Vital in forming the finally-enacted social security legislation were the views and pressures of hundreds of organizations representing labor, management, the states, welfare groups and social workers. Most of these organizations offered their suggestions to the Senate during the two months of public Finance Committee hearings on the bill in early 1950. For the most part they were attempting to persuade the Senate to make changes in the House's provisions.

The first witness at the hearings, which began Jan. 17, was Arthur J. Altmeyer, Social Security Administrator. Presenting the government's view of the measure, he urged the Committee to bring "practically all" the nation's gainfully employed persons under the law. Altmeyer said he did not wish to criticize HR 6000 but wanted merely to suggest ways in which its objectives could be "more fully achieved."

Sen. Robert A. Taft (R .Ohio), a Committee member, interspersed Altmeyer's testimony with some views of his own Jan. 18. The Ohioan said it was a "misnomer" to call the social security system an insurance plan, adding that the payroll contributions amounted to "a general tax on the body politic", creating higher prices for all. Then Taft asked why not "put everybody under an old age pension — say $25 a month — with no contributions and let states add anything they want." The Ohioan, when queried further by newspaper reporters about the idea, explained he had offered it only in seeking reaction. He said he would support the bill as it was before the Committee.

General Positions

After hearing the government's views, the Committee turned to various organizations that wanted to testify.

Although the National Association of Manufacturers, the Committee for Constitutional Government and the National Economic Council were relatively critical of an expansion of the social security system, most business, trade, union and social service organizations agreed that more people should be covered by the system and they should get higher benefits than the original law provided.

Beyond this the complex program ran into much disagreement.

The Congress of Industrial Organizations and the American Federation of Labor wanted more and broader coverage than HR 6000 provided. The American Farm Bureau Federation and the National Grange supported it with some reservations.

The U. S. Chamber of Commerce wanted universal coverage and "generally" favored increased benefits. It urged ultimate reliance on an insurance program instead of public assistance, and said it wanted no increase in taxes to finance the program "until necessary to prevent diminution" in the funds.

The House bill would have permitted employees of state and local governments, already under a retirement system, to qualify for federal social security payments as well, provided they voted among themselves in favor of doing so. Coverage for those not under any system was also provided on a voluntary basis. Groups which favored coverage for these employes were:

Teachers Insurance & Annuity Assn. of America (also for increasing benefits and easing eligibility requirements for newly covered)

American Fedn. of State, County and Municipal Employees (AFL)

American Fedn. of Teachers (AFL)

Amalgamated Assn. of Street, Electric Ry. and Motor Coach Employees of America (AFL)

Wisconsin Retirement Fund

American Council on Education

Natl. Assn. of County Officials

Boston Housing Authority

AFL (but not police and firemen)

Natl. Sheriffs' Assn. (for deputy sheriffs)

Professionals

The House bill covered the self-employed, with the exception of doctors, lawyers, dentists, osteopaths, veterinarians, chiropractors, optometrists, Christian Science practitioners, publishers and several categories of engineers.

The American Institute of Architects and National Society of Professional Engineers wanted exclusion of all self - employed architects and engineers, respectively. The American Naturopathic Association "wanted out" for naturopaths.

Agricultural Workers

The House bill, while it provided coverage for some agricultural processing workers — the so-called "borderline" agricultural employees— did not include regularly employed farm labor.

The National Farmers Unions, generally for HR 6000, expressed keen disappointment at the House's failure to cover farmers and farm workers.

National Grange and New York State Farm Bureau Federation also favored inclusion of both groups. The American Farm Bureau Federation also wanted coverage for farm labor and employees of general farm groups. AFBF was willing to include farmers — if feasible, and if other self - employed were covered, also.

National Milk Producers Federation wanted all employees, including agricultural ones, covered.

American Association of Nurserymen, Inc., sought coverage of agricultural workers under old age and survivors insurance but not under unemployment compensation.

National Association for the Advancement of the Colored People, National Child Labor Committee, National Citizens Council for Migrant Labor, National Farm Labor Union (AFL), AFL, CIO, Food, Tobacco, Agricultural and Allied Workers Union of America, and Hawaiian Sugar Planters' Association, were among those urging inclusion of farm workers.

Business groups who took stands for inclusion of farm workers were NAM, National Retail Dry Goods Assn., and National Assn. of Life Underwriters.

Other backers of farm worker coverage were: American Home Economics Assn., American Assn. for Social Security, League for Industrial Democracy, New Jersey Welfare Council, American Public Welfare Assn., American Assn. of Social Workers, Natl. Lawyers Guild, and Council for Social Action, Congregational Churches.

Non - Profit Organizations

Coverage provided in the House bill for non - profit organizations — religious, charitable, welfare, educational groups — elicited stands from numerous groups. The House required compulsory coverage for employes of these groups but left it up to the organization as to whether it would pay the employer's part of the tax — normally half. Organizations favoring coverage as spelled out in the House version were:

American Assn. of Social Workers

American Home Economics Assn.

American Jewish Committee

American Public Health Assn.

American Social Hygiene Assn.

Boys' Clubs of America

Camp Fire Girls

Child Welfare League of America

Community Chests and Councils of America

Council of Jewish Fedns. and Welfare Funds

Family Service Assn. of America

Natl. Jewish Welfare Board

Natl. Organization for Public Health Nursing

Natl. Recreation Assn.

Natl. Society for the Prevention of Blindness

Natl. Travelers Aid Assn.

Natl. Tuberculosis Assn.

Natl. Urban League

Salvation Army

Organizations registering other views were:

American Hospital Association backed coverage for non - profit hospital employees:

American Nurses' Association asked expansion of coverage for all nurses, including those in non-profit agencies and on private duty; opposed the voluntary aspect of employer's contribution:

Lutheran Church, Missouri Synod wanted a clarifying amendment excluding non - ordained ministers.

Southern Baptist Convention relief and annuity board asked exemption for church organizations; has own plans.

American Association of University Professors asked coverage for non - profit agencies' employees.

American Farm Bureau Federation sought coverage for employees of general farm organizations.

National Federation of Settlements, Philadelphia Assn. of Settlements & Neighborhood Centers, and Philadelphia Chapter, American Assn. of Social Workers asked coverage of employees of non-profit groups on same terms as for other groups (compulsory employer - sharing in cost).

Wage Base for Social Security Taxes

The House bill upped the $3,000 wage base figure in the original law to $3,600. Labor wanted a base higher than that set by the House. Business groups varied, but most preferred the $3,000 figure, although the National Tool & Die Manufacturers Association was for a $4,800 base, or at least $4,200.

Organizations for a $3,000 base:

Natl. Coal Assn.

American Life Convention, and Life Insurance Assn. of America

Natl. Assn. of Life Underwriters

Natl. Federation of American Shipping, Inc.

Natl. Retail Dry Goods Assn.

NAM

Illinois Mfrs. Assn.

Ntl. Lawyers Guild — $4,800

CIO — $4,800

American Assn. for Social Security — $4,800

League for Industrial Democracy— $4,800

Veterans Benefits

The American Legion and the Disabled American Veterans backed the provision of the House bill giving coverage to veterans for time spent in armed forces during World War II. DAV liked the $160 per month credit but the Legion wanted this raised to $250 a month.

Lump Sum Benefits

Payment of a lump sum death benefit to the survivors of every insured worker, instead of the present payment only when no survivor is immediately eligible for monthly benefits was opposed by the Life Insurers Conference. But the National Funeral Directors Association of the U. S. Inc., supported the lump sum payments.

Tipping

The proposals to include tips in wages that are subject to social security taxes — the House bill included them — was opposed by:

The American Hotel Association

National Restaurant Association

National Licensed Beverage Association

But the Hotel and Restaurant Employees and Bartenders International Union (AFL) was for inclusion of tips.

Other Stands

The Controllers Institute of America proposed a single withholding transaction by employers for both social security and income taxes which are taken from weekly paychecks.

The Christian Science Committee on Publication wanted to give public assistance recipients the chance to choose Christian Science treatment when in need of medical care.

The Colorado Osteopathic Association and American Osteopathic Association wanted to include osteopathic services under medical care available through public assistance programs.

J. O. McMahan, Commissioner, Tennessee State Department of Public Welfare, opposed the exemption of $50 of income earned by the blind.

Bill Child, Commissioner of Idaho Dept. of Public Assistance, backed the stamp plan as a method of collecting farm workers.

Dr. Ellen Winston, Commissioner, North Carolina State Board of Welfare, asked a broader definition of eligibility for aid to dependent children.

Earl M. Kouns, Director, Colorado State Dept. of Public Welfare, sought protection for Colorado, a high benefit paying state, from migration into state; asked that residence requirements not be forced down too far. The Colorado Joint Planning and Legislative Committee (composed of county commissioners, welfare directors, etc.) sought a uniform one year residence requirement. The Denver Bureau of Public Welfare was against a cut in residence requirements, and against any change in the federal grant formula which would reduce Colorado's share.

Robert T. Lansdale, Commissioner of Social Welfare, New York State, sought inclusion of Puerto Rico and the Virgin Islands.

Sanford Bates, Commissioner of New Jersey State Dept. of Institutions & Agencies, opposed broadening the assistance program. He also opposed the variable grants idea and federal assistance to persons in institutions.

Philip H. Vogt, Welfare Administrator, Douglas County Welfare Dept., Omaha, Nebraska, wanted the present system revamped. He would eliminate the federal statute's titles on public assistance, set up a sound social insurance system, give a federal appropriation to the states for relief on a simplified, need basis run by the states. The federal funds would cease coming when the insurance system is sound.

Dwight W. Burney, State Senator and Chairman of the Nebraska Legislative Council on Laws Relating to Children, also sought changes including a federal law making it a felony for parents to desert their children.

Disaster Relief

HR 8396—P. L. 875

SUMMARY

Both houses received several bills providing for emergency disaster relief in various states. Then William Lemke (R N.D.) and Guy Cordon (R Ore.) introduced HR 8396 and S 2415, respectively, to provide for an overall program of disaster relief.

The House bill was finally approved with minor changes Aug. 7 in the House and Sept. 14 in the Senate, both times on voice vote. It became Public Law No. 875.

Provisions

The final bill provided that:

In case of "major disaster", as any flood, drought, fire, hurricane, earthquake or storm, the governor of the affected state may certify to the President that federal assistance is needed.

The President will then direct federal agencies to provide assistance.

States will supplement federal aid money.

Federal agencies shall co - operate with states and local governments and relief agencies in carrying out aid.

A total of $5 million is authorized.

The President shall report to Congress annually on use of the money.

BACKGROUND

Each year bills had been passed providing for disaster aid in the case of individual emergencies. Action was, of necessity, taken only after the emergency was full - blown. The bills were designed to put the program on a continuing basis and make the money available for immediate use. (See CQ Almanac, Vol. V, pages 130, 232.)

HOUSE

The House Public Works Committee held two days of hearings July 18 and 19 on HR 8396 and on HR 8461, HR 8420, HR 8390 and HR 8435, bills to authorize aid for reconstruction and repair of roads, etc. in flood-damaged North Dakota and Minnesota. The latter bills were laid aside when it was pointed out that HR 8396 could be used for disaster relief in all states.

Testimony favoring the Lemke bill was given by representatives of various state and local governments and the Executive Department. The committee made several minor changes, set a ceiling of $5 million on expenditures and reported the bill July 25.

Supporters of the bill pointed out Aug. 7 that in recent years federal aid in disasters had not exceeded $3,250,000 and said the pending bill would meet future need without delay. Opponents argued that disasters should be met as they arose, as had been done in the past. They objected to the provisions leaving expenditure of the money up to the President.

Kenneth B. Keating (R N.Y.) moved that the bill be sent back to the Committee with instructions to require that Congress pass on expenditure of the money in each individual disaster. The motion was rejected 7-72 on standing vote and then 25-232 on roll-call vote. (see p. 196).

The bill was then approved by voice vote.

SENATE

The Senate Committee on Public Works held hearings July 19 on S 2415 as well as S 3447, S 3495, S 3505 and S 3506, bills providing for disaster relief in Minnesota and North Dakota. As in the House, the special bills were laid aside for the general measure S 2415. HR 8396 was substituted for its Senate companion and reported by the Committee Sept. 14.

Senate discussion was brief. No opposition was voiced. An amendment by William Langer (R N.D.) to increase money available to $10 million was withdrawn when John McClellan (D Ark.) said the House was not likely to accept the higher figure.

Passage was on voice vote.

The bill was signed Sept. 30. It became Public Law No. 875.

Federal Aid To Education

S 246

SUMMARY

Efforts to provide federal aid to the States for elementary and secondary education failed in the 81st Congress. The much-disputed measure to authorize the aid, S 246, passed the Senate in 1949 but bogged down completely in the House Education and Labor Committee in 1950. The House group never reported S 246 to the lower chamber, chiefly because the Committee itself could not reach agreement over one outstandingly controversial feature in the bill.

This was the issue of whether federal aid, if granted, would be available to private institutions such as parochial schools which are not supported by taxes. As passed by the Senate, S 246 ruled private schools eligible for certain aid in states which would permit it. But a rival measure (HR 4643) in the House Committee specifically restricted aid to public, tax-supported schools.

(For details of the controversy aroused in 1949 over these differing approaches to federal aid and private schools, see CQ Almanac, Vol. V, Pages 266-9.)

The House measure (HR 4643) was never reported, because shortly after the 81st Congress reconvened in 1950 for its second session, Chairman John Lesinski (D Mich.) announced his group would attempt to amend S 246 instead of pushing the rival bill.

Throughout February, Lesinski's group wrestled and wrangled over S 246, to no avail. Controversy flared ever more sharply on the question of the eligibility of private, non-tax-supported schools for federal aid. Rep. Graham A. Barden (D N.C.) who opposed eligibility for private schools accused the Catholic heirarchy of obstructing progress towards federal aid to education.

In the course of the Church's response, a multi-cornered row developed, which involved Eleanor Roosevelt, Cardinal Spellman and other prominent figures, both in and out of Congress.

Ultimately, the House Education and Labor Committee on March 14 rejected S 246 by an extremely close vote of 12-13. The ballot killed further consideration of the comprehensive federal aid-to-education measure for the remainder of the 81st Congress.

Provisions

S 246 authorized $300 million worth of federal aid-to-education to states, territories and possessions to equalize educational opportunities in them.

The measure also carried these provisions:

1. A formula for allotting federal money on a basis of a state's income per child. Two figures were used in calculating a state's share of the education aid. The first was the result of multiplying $50 by the number of persons 5 to 17 years old. The second figure was one per cent of individual income in the state. If one per cent of income was less than $50 per school child, the federal government would pay the difference. That would range from $5.38 for each school child in Vermont to $29.18 per child in Mississippi. States in which one per cent of income exceeded $50 per school child would receive a flat rate of $5 per child.

According to calculations published in 1949 by the Senate committee, 19 states would thus receive proportional payments, and the rest the flat $5 per child rate. Mississippi, with the highest per child payment, would receive an estimated total of $16,980,000 for its 582,000 persons 5 to 17 years old. Vermont for example, would get $420,000 for its 78,000 children on the basis of its $5.38 per child rate — just above the $5 rate which would go to most of the states. Nevada, with the highest per child income ($8,960) of all the states, would receive $125,000 for its 25,000 school age population.

2. A "penalty clause" setting up a standard for state education spending. For the first two years of the act, the standard would be 2.25 per cent of a state's income. After that the standard would be 2.5 per cent. Under S 246, a state, whose education spending was less than the standard percentage of its income, would receive a proportionate reduction in federal aid.

Thus, Alabama, for example, with a school spending percentage of 1.87 of its income, would not have received the full $23 annual payment per child to which its income would otherwise entitle it. With California, however, whose school spending percentage is 1.68 of income, this provision would not matter, since in any case that state, with the nation's fourth highest per child income, would get only the minimum federal aid of $5 per child. But a low-percentage-spending state could qualify for the full amount given in the formula as its school expenditures came up to the recommended minimum.

3. The bill further discouraged any tendency toward shifting education financial responsibility from states to the federal government by putting into operation after four years a stipulation of a minimum state education expenditure of 2 per cent of its income before a state could receive anything more than $5 per child.

4. A pro rata distribution of funds to states in case the appropriation was less than the total allocated to all the states.

No Federal Intervention

5. Required state compliance with provisions of the bill as a condition for receiving funds, but specifically prohibited federal officials from exercising control over schools under the bill. This, reported the Senate committee, "is a positive prohibition against impairment of local and State control over public . . . education with reference to expenditures made under the act".

6. Left up to the states the question of whether any of the money would be used in private or parochial education. The funds could go for "any current expenditure for elementary or secondary school purposes for which (state revenues) . . . may legally and constitutionally be expended in such state". The Committee pointed out that courts have upheld state spending for sectarian schools for auxiliary services such as free textbooks and transportation. The bill "is not intended as an invitation to introduce practices which would breach provisions of the Constitution . . .", the Committee reported.

7. States with segregated schools would have to provide "just and equitable apportionment" of federal funds for minority race schools, without reduction of state and local funds spent during fiscal 1949 for segregated schools.

8. Required state apportioning of federal funds so that by the fourth year of the act there would be available from all revenue sources a minimum of $55 per child for all local school jurisdictions. Within the local districts spending for minority race schools was required to average at least the $55 per child minimum.

Party Stands

The Democratic platform stated: "We advocate Federal aid for education administered by and under the control of the states . . . We insist on the right of every American child to obtain a good education." Senate Democrats voted 36-3 for S 246.

The Republican platform stated: "We favor equality of educational opportunity for all and the promotion of education and educational facilities." Senate Republicans voted 22-12 for S 246.

Federal aid-to-education was one of the key points in President Truman's "Fair Deal" program. In his 1949 State of the Union message, the President told Congress, "We are not yet assuring all children of our nation the opportunity of receiving the basic education which is necessary to a strong Democracy."

BACKGROUND

Congressional coolness to numerous aid - to - education bills in the past stemmed from a traditional argument that federal aid means federal control. In S 246 specific prohibitions were set up in 1949 to avoid such controls. Addition of such controls was considered an important point in winning over Sen. Robert A. Taft (R Ohio) who had opposed such bills in the past.

Advocates of federal aid, using the general welfare provision of the Constitution as a starting point, have usually declared that inequalities of wealth between states create like inequalities in education. They have claimed that 60 per cent of the population does not now live in states where it was born. This shifting population makes lack of education a national problem. Census reports indicate that an estimated 8,600,000 adults either have no education or have attended schools less than five years. Of this number half were native-born Americans. Census figures show four million children between the ages of five and seventeen are not in school.

Other factors customarily cited to show the need for federal aid are the growing national population with consequent rise in the number of children of school age, the lack of competent teachers, and shortage of school facilities.

HOUSE

When Congress reconvened in 1950, S 246 — the Senate-passed aid-to-education bill which the House had left untended in 1949 — was before the House Education and Labor Committee. In the middle of January, the late John Lesinski (D Mich.), group chairman, announced that he would set aside a full month, Feb. 6 to March 6, for closed committee sessions on the $300 million S 246, and other federal aid-to-education bills.

Backing up Lesinski, the group formally voted on Jan. 16 to work daily on S 246 starting on Feb. 6 "until final determination of the matter has been made."

The committee also bound itself to block off delaying action on the controversial measure by a 13-7 vote on a resolution by Rep. Cleveland M. Bailey (D W.Va.).

The Committee buckled down to work on Feb. 6, the same day that Graham A. Barden (D N.C.) introduced a proposal to ban aid to public schools not supported by taxes. Barden's amendment served to reopen the entire controversy of whether or not parochial and other non-tax-supported schools could be eligible for federal aid.

During the group's study of S 246, a pamphlet on the sex education of children led the committee to adopt March 1 a resolution offered by Rep. Carroll D. Kearns (R Pa.), former school superintendent, calling for a ban on federal aid to education unless the President promised that the Federal Security Agency would keep its hands off the nation's schools. It was the FSA that published the pamphlet formally titled "Your Child From 6 to 12."

Note From President

Vote on the Kearns resolution was 13-11. The following day, Chairman Lesinski received a letter from President Truman dismissing as groundless any fears that the Administration through FSA would interfere with public schooling.

The President went on to urge favorable Committee approval of S 246. Lesinski said further hearings would be held "if necessary."

Further hearings were held, and the $300 million federal aid-to-education program (S 246) continued to cause repeated splits in the House Committee.

Religious Question

Dissension continued on the question of whether religious schools should be eligible for part of the federal funds. Carrying the dispute outside of Congress, Rep. Barden in a New York speech March 6 said it was the Catholic Church which had injected the religious issue into the aid-to-education program, and blamed the Church for the program's slow progress. Barden singled out Cardinal Francis Spellman for criticism. Spokesmen for the Cardinal, who was then in Rome on a Holy Year pilgrimage, said they had no comment.

Sharing the platform with Barden on March 6 was Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt, who had been involved in a dispute in 1949 with Cardinal Spellman after she had written her disapproval of private school eligibility for federal aid. (See CQ Almanac, Vol. V, page 270.)

On March 6, she reiterated her opposition to the provision in S 246 permitting states to spend federal aid-to-education funds according to state laws — which might hold parochial schools eligible. She said she was "certainly opposed" to moves setting aside a percentage of federal funds for transportation of parochial school students.

Cardinal's Response

When Cardinal Spellman returned from Europe on March 22, he struck at this attitude. Although he referred by name only to Barden, the Cardinal said, "We feel that it is un-American that any federal law be passed disposing of federal monies for auxiliary services, and depriving American children of these public facilities. Now they are attempting to keep American children off public transportation facilities. Tomorrow they will try to keep us out of the public libraries, the public gardens and perhaps off the sidewalks . . . "

Cardinal Spellman said that Barden's March 6 charge that the Cardinal was a "cruel authoritarian" because of his 1949 criticism of Mrs. Roosevelt did not alter Spellman's claim that "I would leave a tarnished name if I didn't try to prevent discrimination against 2,500,000 American children."

Committee Votes

Meanwhile, on March 8, Barden and Rep. Andrew Jacobs (D Ind.) in the House Education Committee offered two new amendments to S 246, to ban federal funds to schools which were not tax-supported or public.

The group rejected each amendment by a 3-21 vote.

Although the broad proposals of Jacobs and Barden to curb the use of any federal funds by private schools were rejected, an amendment which would have permitted these schools to use a portion of the money for school bus systems was also defeated. The Committee March 7 rejected, 9-16, such a proposal by Rep. John F. Kennedy (D Mass.).

Before voting down the Kennedy proposal, however, the Committee tentatively approved a formula worked out by Rep. Hugo S. Sims, Jr., (D S.C.) for computing the amount of money each state could receive. It clarified, rather than supplanted, the original Senate formula which would extend federal assistance to the states on a ratio of $5 to each school child.

The group March 9 divided 19-5 in adopting an amendment by Rep. Adam Clayton Powell (D N.Y.) to extend enough aid to the so-called "needy states" to raise the minimum for each school child to $60, and as high as $100 for children in "non-needy" states, and to guarantee that racial discrimination would not be involved in the apportionment of funds.

Then the Committee defeated, 10-14, an amendment by Rep. Thomas H. Burke (D Ohio) specifying that 75 per cent of the funds go for teachers' salaries, which he said would raise educational standards.

A third vote of 4-19 turned down another amendment by Barden which would have defined eligible schools as public, tax-supported ones. Under this definition, parochial and private schools would have been ineligible.

Final Decision: Rejection

On March 14, S 246 came up for a final decision. It was rejected 12-13.

Favoring the bill were Augustine B. Kelley (D Pa.), Adam C. Powell (D N.Y.), John S. Wood (D Ga.), Cleveland M. Bailey (D W.Va.), Leonard Irving (D Mo.), Carl D. Perkins (D Ky.), Charles R. Howell (D. N.J.), Hugo S. Sims (D S.C.), Andrew Jacobs (D Ind.), Roy W. Wier (D Minn.), Walter E. Brehm (R Ohio) and Thruston Ballard Morton (R Ky.).

Opposed were Chairman John Lesinski (D Mich.), John F. Kennedy (D Mass.), Graham A. Barden (D N.C.), Wingate H. Lucas (D Tex.), Thomas H. Burke (D Ohio), Tom Steed (D Okla.), Samuel K. McConnell, Jr. (R Pa.), Ralph W. Gwinn (R N.Y.), Wint Smith (R Kan.), Carroll D. Kearns (R Pa.), Richard M. Nixon (R Calif.), Thomas H. Werdel (R Calif.) and Harold M. Velde (R Ill.).

After thus sealing the fate of S 246, which received no further action in the 81st Congress, the House Committee agreed to take up a bill (HR 1551) authorizing $600 million in aid for public schools construction. But March 15 the committee voted 13-12 to reconsider another aid bill (HR 5939) — $300 million exclusively for teachers' salaries to be distributed by states.

Neither one of these bills was ever reported to the House, however.

LOBBY STANDS

Most of the national organizations which expressed stands on federal aid to education, school construction and aid to medical instruction repeated in 1950 the positions they had generally taken in 1949. (For first session expressions, see CQ Almanac, Vol. V, pages 269, 271.)

In 1950, the question of whether private, non-tax-supported institutions such as parochial schools would be eligible for Federal aid, if it were provided, touched off new rounds in the controversy that had surrounded this issue the year before.

Organizations again taking a pro or con position on this issue in 1950 were:

Supporting S 246, If Altered

Chief among organizations supporting S 246 so long as private schools would also be eligible for federal aid was the National Catholic Welfare Conference.

Supporting S 246 only if eligiblity were restricted to public, tax - supported schools were:

American Association of School Administrators
American Parents Committee
American Association of Colleges for Teacher Education Association for Childhood Education International Committee on Federal Aid to Public Education
General Board of the Evangelism of the Methodist Church
House of Bishops of the Protestant Episcopal Church
National Congress of Parents and Teachers

Aid To Medical Education

Several attempts were made during 1950 to provide federal aid to institutions specializing in medical education. The efforts were unsuccessful.

HR 5940

This was a bill calling for a five-year federal program of grants and scholarships in medicine, public health and nursing. The legislation would have set up a limited number of scholarships varying from $150 to $1,000 and also would have made grants to new medical schools for equipment.

The measure was favorably reported on Oct. 11 by the House Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee, but no action was taken in the House. A similar bill, S 1453, had been passed by the Senate in 1949 (See CQ Almanac, Vol. V, page 301) but had died in the House Committee during the second session of Congress.

The House Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee Aug. 16 voted 9 to 8 to shelve for the remainder of the session a bill (HR 8886) providing a five-year program of federal aid to colleges and schools engaged in educating and training medical personnel, including doctors, dentists and nurses. The bill, officially, was tabled, a parliamentary maneuver that had the effect of killing it for the rest of the 81st Congress.

Federal grants of $5 million a year were carried in the bill for aiding medical colleges and schools to provide expanded facilities. Gradually increasing grants for instruction, to encourage larger enrollments, would have totalled $250 million for the full five-year program.

Rep. Andrew J. Biemiller (D Wis.), author of the measure, called the tabling action "a great mistake" and said the American Medical Association was primarily responsible for the bill's defeat.

HR 9508

The House Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee Aug. 30 voted 15 to 8 to table this second bill providing for federal aid to medical education. The bill would have authorized a 5-year program under which medical, dental, and other schools in the health field would have received a total of $75 million to expand their facilities and take in more students than they were then enrolling.

According to Rep. Andrew J. Biemiller (D Wis.), who introduced the measure, the defeat of HR 9508 Aug. 30 was also due chiefly to the opposition of the American Medical Association. Biemiller pointed out that it was the third time during the session that President Truman's request for federal aid to medical schools had been rejected.

School Construction

SUMMARY

Shortly after it pigeonholed S 246, the major federal aid - to - education measure, the House Labor and Education Committee turned to the related problem of federal aid for school construction.

On March 28, the group heard Rep. Albert Rains (D Ala.) testify that federal aid was so badly needed to build schools that "I don't see how Congress can hold off long from helping out the states." He was the first witness to testify on behalf of legislation which would allow the Reconstruction Finance Corp. to make grants totaling $400 million, and loans of $400 million, to the States for elementary and secondary school buildings, as well as equipment. He said Alabama needed $178 million for school construction.

Congressmen Plead

Reps. Thor C. Tollefson (R Wash.) and Hugh B. Mitchell (D Wash.) put in a special plea for aid where military establishments have created a problem by moving large populations into districts with inadequate schools and insufficient tax revenues. Rep. Henderson Lanham (D Ga.) said many Georgia children couldn't go to school because there were no buildings to house them.

Classroom Need

The group was told April 3 by Dr. Earl J. McGrath, U.S. Commissioner of Education, that the nation needed 300,000 new classrooms within the next few years. Dr. McGrath stressed that such a program would not be a substitute for a general aid to education bill, since he considered more funds for teachers of greater importance than the building program.

By this time, the gist of the pleas by Tollefson, Mitchell and others had become the central question in any proposed school - construction program. Such a program was to serve the major purpose of directing school-construction aid primarily to certain areas which were severely overcrowded because federal installations such as military bases had been located in them.

Program Drafted

Accordingly, a three - year program of federal school construction to aid overcrowded areas was authorized in a bill (HR 8113) approved May 16 by a House Labor Subcommittee. The program was to cost an estimated $100 million. It was to provide added classrooms for children of government employees on federal installations which did not contribute taxes to local districts forced to provide the added school facilities.

Two Bills Approved

However, this particular bill was never reported because the Education and Labor Committee instead approved two similar, complementary measures. One, S 2317, provided for school construction in crowded "defense areas." The other, HR 7940, centralized government assistance to these same "impacted" areas for maintenance and operation of existing schools. About $20 to $25 million was involved in the latter measure, which gave the Commissioner of Education authority to extend the assistance now meted out by a number of agencies.

Descriptions of both S 2317 and HR 7940 follow.

Designed to grant federal aid to relieve conditions in schools overcrowded by the children of federal workers and military personnel, and to provide for the construction of additional schools, S 2317 provided for federal surveys of proposed school facilities, and for emergency school construction in overburdened areas.

No specific authorization of funds was in the bill, but the Supplemental Appropriations Bill for 1951 (HR 9526) carried $50,165,000 in cash and contract authority to launch the program. Local school districts, according to terms of the bill, will have to match any federal funds extended them in an amount based on the needs of the schools involved. This would be determined by the extent of defense or other federal activities in the area.

Aid for surveys of school needs would be separate and apart from the aid for actual construction. Grants would be authorized to states simply for surveying their need for elementary and secondary school facilities irrespective of emergency requirements. Actual construction would be only in defense-affected areas.

Passage Through Congress

The measure had been passed by the Senate in 1949. (For details and provisions, see CQ Almanac, Vol. V, page 298.) In 1950, the House Education and Labor Committee endorsed the bill Aug. 7, after approving an authorization of $150 million for school construction. The group said "600-700 defense-area" school districts would be affected.

The House approved the bill Aug. 22 on a voice vote, with no controversy. Because the House Committee had drastically raised the total authorization in the bill from the $5 million the Senate had originally approved, the measure had to go back to the Senate for that chamber's concurrence.

The Senate refused to assent to all the changes, however, and a conference committee was ordered to reconcile differing House and Senate viewpoints.

A compromise was reached Sept. 14. The sum authorized for school construction was set between $150 million and $170 million, but was not pinpointed. The Senate agreed to the conference report on Sept. 7, and the House adopted the compromise on Sept. 15.

President Truman signed the measure on Sept. 23.

This bill also authorized annual federal aid to school districts financially burdened because federal installations, such as military bases, were located in them. Under this bill, schools would get relief in proportion to the number of extra children brought into the area by federal installations and in proportion to reduced tax income resulting from federal purchase of land. Money could be used for maintenance or operation of schools.

The measure established a program similar to the one carried on under World War II under the old Lanham Act.

The aid program under the law will run to June 30, 1954. Chiefly a maintenance measure, the bill was a supplementary one to S 2317, which authorized federal aid for the construction of new schools in the so-called "defense areas."

An amendment written into HR 7940 by the Senate and accepted by the House required payments to the affected districts to be made on a current rather than a deficit basis.

(Some $23 million to finance the program was ultimately approved in an appropriations bill. See page 130.)

HOUSE ACTION

The House Education and Labor Committee reported HR 7940 on June 20. It said the measure would help 600 school districts and communities. Explaining its measure, the group said the program was estimated to cost $32 million annually, an increase of $15 million over what federal agencies already paid hard-pressed school districts.

The House passed HR 7940 by voice vote on July 13, after approving a section of the bill which made the program a permanent, continuing one.

SENATE ACTION

The Senate Labor Committee, to which the House-passed HR 7940 was referred, favorably reported the bill on Aug. 29, but not until it had reduced the authorized duration of the program from an indefinite period to three years. The Senate itself passed the bill in this form on Sept. 13, by voice vote.

CONFERENCE

The Senate's stricture on an indefinite program was not accepted by the House, and so HR 7940 was sent to conference. The conference committee reached a compromise on Sept. 18, whereby the four year limit to the program's duration was set.

The conference report was adopted by the Senate on Sept. 18, and by the House on Sept. 20. President Truman signed the legislation on Sept. 30.

LOBBY STANDS

Supporting S 2317 were the American Parents Committee, the AFL, and the National Citizens Committee for the Public Schools.

Organizations generally favoring in 1950 legislation to aid overcrowded school districts in keeping up their educational systems were:

American Municipal Association

National Education Association

Washington, D. C. "Nation-wide Citizens Mass Meeting"

More than 35 wires received by the House Education and Labor Committee from 86 school districts

Against HR 7940 was the Citizens Public Expenditures Survey, Inc., which made its views known in literature sent Congressmen.

Library Aid

HR 874

The House March 9 turned down a bill (HR 874) providing $163 million in aid to states to promote library services.

The money was to be used in rural areas to demonstrate library services. Each state setting up a program would have been eligible to receive a grant of $40,000 a year for five years plus an additional annual sum ranging from $40,000 to $100,000 to match money appropriated by the state

Madden Bill

The bill was introduced by Ray J. Madden (D Ind.). It was approved by the House Education and Labor Committee Feb. 2, 1950, and was considered by the House March 9.

Madden told the House his bill was designed "to provide for the demonstration of public library service in areas through the country which do not have such service, or with inadequate library facilities." He said the aid was needed by 33 million persons who do not have free library service.

Opponents of the bill said such state aid would be an unnecessary burden on the Treasury. Carroll D. Kearns (R Pa.) moved to send the measure back to the committee. His motion lost 162-176 on roll call. But on the try for final approval, the bill was rejected 161-164 on roll call. The House had decided originally to consider the bill on a 209-140 roll call vote (See vote chart p 196).

Before the bill was rejected one amendment was considered and approved by voice vote. It was offered by Augustine B. Kelley (D Pa.) to include the Virgin Islands within the scope of the bill.

Medical Research

SUMMARY

A bill (S 2591) to provide federal aid to research in a variety of diseases received Congressional approval without opposition. The measure wrapped up provisions of dozens of separate bills, each of which dealt with only one disease.

The Senate passed the measure in 1949. The House Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee reported a similar bill (HR 3943) June 27, 1950. The text of House bill was approved July 10 on voice vote under the Senate bill number. The minor differences between the two versions were ironed out by a conference committee July 27. The House then adopted the conference report Aug. 1, and the Senate approved it the following day. Both acted by voice vote. The President signed the bill Aug. 15, and it became Public Law No. 692.

Provisions

The bill contained the following major provisions:

The Public Health Service Act is amended to direct the Surgeon General to establish a research institute on arthritis, rheumatism and metabolic diseases and an institute for research on neurological diseases (including epilepsy, cerebral palsy and multiple sclerosis) and blindness.

The Surgeon General is authorized, but not directed, to set up institutes for any other disease, including poliomyelitis and leprosy.

A national advisory council for each institute shall be appointed by the Attorney General.

12 Appointed Members

The councils shall have 12 appointed members, six of whom shall be authorities in the field concerned. The Surgeon General and representatives of the Veterans' Administration and Secretary of Defense shall be ex-officio members.

Each institute will foster research, co-ordinate other researches, train personnel, establish research and training fellowship, approve grants-in-aid, erect buildings, etc.

Thirty extra professional and scientific workers may be hired at $10,000 to $15,000 annually without competitive civil service examination.

BACKGROUND

In answer to the President's request for a comprehensive national health program, the identical bills S 1679, HR 4312 and HR 4313 were introduced in 1949. The principal provision of the bills, a national health insurance plan, did not receive action. But other provisions were put into separate bills and passed. (CQ Almanac Vol V, page 292.)

Title II of the Senate bill authorized the Surgeon General to set up a variety of medical research institutes. That Title was rewritten as S 2591 and introduced in the Senate by Claude Pepper (D Fla.) Elbert Thomas (D Utah.), James E. Murray (D Mont.), Lister Hill (D Ala.), Matthew M. Neely (D W. Va.), Paul Douglas (D Ill.), Hubert H. Humphrey (D Minn.), Garrett L. Withers (D Ky.), Robert A. Taft (R Ohio), H. Alexander Smith (R N.J.), Forrest C. Donnell (R Mo.), George D. Aiken (R Vt.), Wayne Morse (R Ore.), Warren G. Magnuson (D Wash.), Charles W. Tobey (R N.H.), and William Langer (R N.D.).

Approved in 1949

The bill was approved by the Senate Labor and Public Welfare Committee Sept. 22, 1949. It passed the Senate Sept. 27, 1949.

Meanwhile the House Commerce Committee had been holding hearings on its two health bills. At the same time, the Committee was also studying 28 separate bills designed to promote research in specific diseases. The session ended without final Committee action on the broad health plan or the small bills.

However, J. Percy Priest (D Tenn.) wrapped up Title II of the general health plan legislation into a separate bill, HR 3943, and introduced it March 31, 1949.

HOUSE

The Priest bill was reported by the Committee June 27, 1950, after minor amendments were added. The Committee report said the bill was based on the original national health bill's research provisions, plus the 28 individual research measures, plus suggestions by numerous witnesses who testified in 1949 on those measures.

This omnibus measure was approved by the House July 10 on voice vote without debate or amendment. The Senate bill S 2591, was then amended by substituting the text of the House bill.

CONFERENCE

Differences in the two versions of the bill were minor. The 1949 Senate bill directed the establishment of two new institutes, one on arthritis, rheumatism and metabolic diseases, another on neurological diseases (including epilepsy, cerebral palsy and multiple sclerosis) and blindness. It also authorized establishment of other institutes for other diseases as deemed necessary by the Surgeon General. The 1950 House bill simply authorized establishment of as many institutes as were necessary. The conference accepted the Senate version.

The Senate bill directed the establishment of two advisory councils, one for each of the new institutes. The House bill called for as many councils as the Surgeon General deemed necessary. The Senate provisions were accepted by the conference.

The Senate bill provided for three ex-officio members of the new councils, the Surgeon General and a representative of the Veterans' Administration and the Department of Defense. The House bill provided for only one ex-officio member, the Surgeon General. The Senate provisions were accepted.

The conference filed its report July 27.

LAW ENACTED

The House agreed to the conference report Aug. 1 on voice vote. The Senate passed it on voice vote the following day. The President signed S 2591 Aug. 15, and it became Public Law No. 692.

National Science Foundation

S. 247—P.L. 507

Although attempts in the 79th Congress to establish a national science foundation were unsuccessful, and a similar program drawn by the 80th Congress ran into a Presidential veto, lawmakers in 1950 finally climaxed a five year drive to set up this project by passing this law.

Designed to promote basic research and scientific education, the National Science Foundation Act of 1950 creates an agency empowered chiefly to (1) make grants and loans for "pure" and applied research in the mathematical, physical, medical, biological, engineering and other fields; (2) undertake military research for national defense; (3) award scholarships and graduate fellowships to U. S. citizens on a competitive basis; (4) aid the interchange of information among scientists in the U. S. and other countries (5) correlate its program with private and other public research projects; and (6) maintain a roster of scientific and technical personnel, while publishing certain data and acting as a clearinghouse for scientific information.

The law authorized the appropriation of $500,000 to establish the Foundation and get its program under way July 1, 1950. It called for annual appropriations up to $15 million for the program, once it is going.

The 81st Congress first granted major action to S. 247 in 1949, when the Senate passed the measure March 18, by a voice vote. The House did not act on the bill before the first session adjourned. On March 1, 1950, however, the lower chamber took up the bill and passed it, 247-126, after adopting several amendments to tighten up security precautions relative to Foundation non-citizen associates. The principal amendment required the FBI to certify the loyalty and eligibility of aliens who might seek connection with the Foundation.

The House - amended version of S. 247 was then sent to conference for reconciliation with the original Senate language. Conferees codified the security - amendments into forms acceptable to both chambers.

The House without objection passed the conference report April 27, the Senate following suit by voice vote the next day. President Truman signed the legislation May 10.

Provisions

Sets up a National Science Foundation to foster a "national policy for the promotion of basic research and education in the sciences; to initiate and support basic scientific research in the mathematical, physical, medical, biological, engineering, and other sciences" by making contracts or other arrangements (such as grants and loans) to further such projects.

Requires the Foundation "at the request of the Secretary of Defense to initiate and support specific research activities in connection with matters relating to the national defense."

Permits the award on a competitive basis of scholarships and graduate fellowships to persons in the mathematical, phsyical, medical, biological, engineering, and other fields. Only U. S. citizens are eligible.

Requires the Foundation to "foster the interchange of scientific information among scientists in the United States and foreign countries" and to "maintain a register of scientific and technical personnel and in other ways provide a central clearinghouse for information. . ."

Authorizes the Foundation "to establish such special commissions" as may from time to time be required to further the general aims of the program, and to "evaluate" data compiled by other federal research agencies.

Sets up a 25 - man National Science Board, to be appointed by the President and confirmed by the Senate. Members to be appointed for six year terms, with only two consecutive terms possible. Board to meet once a year.

Creates the office of the Director of the Foundation, paying $15,000 per annum. Director to be appointed by the President, confirmed by the Senate, and restricted to a six year term.

Grants the Board power to set up various Committees.

Provides the establishment, within the Foundation, of Divisions of Medical Research; Mathematical, Physical, and Engineering Sciences; Biological Sciences; Scientific Personnel and education, and others deemed to be necessary as the program goes on. Each division is empowered to create special committees.

Permits the Foundation to acquire property, but bans operation by the Foundation itself of "any laboratories or pilot plants."

Charges the Foundation to "publish or arrange for the publication" of scientific and technical information without prejudice to the national security.

Prohibits the retention of patents on any invention made under Foundation aegis by an individual inventor.

Requires the Secretary of State to approve cooperation by the Foundation with international projects.

Sets up an elaborate procedure to screen persons engaged in Foundation work. Employees, researchers, or others having any connection with or access to atomic matters would be required to meet the same loyalty standards imposed on personnel directly associated with the Atomic Energy Commission. Persons having access to classified military data are required to pass regular military security scrutinies. Anyone having access to secret documents is required to undergo an FBI check, findings of which would be set before the Foundation itself for evaluation. Each person associated with the Foundation is required to file the regular federal loyalty affidavit, and swear the prescribed loyalty oath. Penalties for perjury are set forth in these various security measures.

Bans any education or research action by the Foundation in the field of atomic energy without the express permission of the Atomic Energy Commission.

Authorizes the appropriation of $500,000 to get the program under way beginning July 1, 1950.

Authorizes the appropriation of $15,000,000 for each fiscal year thereafter.

Correlates the Foundation program with other private and public research projects.

Party Stands

Democrats, in 1948 policy platform: "We pledge the early establishment of a national science foundation under principles which will guarantee the most effective utilization of public and private research facilities."

Republicans in their 1948 platform: "Government. . .should take all needed steps to . . . promote scientific research."

BACKGROUND

S. 247 was jointly introduced during the 81st Congress' first session by Sens. Elbert Thomas (D Utah), Harley Kilgore (D W.Va.), J. William Fulbright (D Ark.), H. Alexander Smith (R N.J.), Guy Cordon (R Ore.) and Leverett Saltonstall (R Mass.) The measure was referred to the Labor and Public Welfare Committee, which reported it March 3, 1949. No hearings were held, because of extensive Committee investigations of the proposed plan held by the 79th and 80th Congress.

The Senate passed S. 247 on March 18 by a voice vote, and the measure was sent across the Capitol to the House Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce. This group considered the bill along with a variety of House measures, one of which was identical to S. 247, and others which were akin to HR 6007, a science foundation bill the House had passed in 1948.

A number of organizations took sides in 1949 at the House hearings on its assorted bills. (See CQ Almanac, Vol. V, page 272.) June 14, the Committee favorably reported its companion measure to the Senate bill. This House bill, HR 4846, never did come to a vote before the first session adjourned, however.

During the 79th and 80th Congresses, similar legislation had also failed to get on the statute books. (See CQ Almanac, Vol. III, pp. 236, 435, 577; Vol. IV, p. 154.) It was not until 1947 that the Congress could agree on a National Science Foundation measure and place it on the President's desk for signing into law. However, the President vetoed that measure because of certain administrative provisions it contained. Thus the whole idea was deferred until 1950, when the Congress climaxed a five-year drive for the program by presenting the White House with an acceptable act, which the President signed, later making a 600-word statement expressing gratification.

HOUSE

In 1949, the House Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee held extensive hearings on S 247 and various House-originated bills pertaining to creation of a national scientific agency. By June, the group had completed its study of the measures, and voted to report HR 4846—the companion bill to S 247. It was reported June 14, but failed to get Rules Committee clearance before the first session adjourned. (See CQ Almanac, Vol. V, page 272.)

Debate

On Feb. 27, under the 21-day Rules Committee discharge rule, Robert Crosser (D Ohio), chairman of the Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee, called up the resolution (H Res 321) providing for consideration of HR 4846. The measure was debated for three days, and a number of amendments were adopted before it was finally passed, 247-126, March 1. (See p. 196 for votes.)

Opposition to the bill came from House members who thought the Foundation would duplicate work already being done by other public and private organizations, or who thought it would be too expensive. There was also much debate on the extent and nature of security regulations, and whether the necessity for such regulations might interfere with the freedom of research and exchange of information necessary to scientific inquiry.

Among speakers against the bill, and their principal reasons for opposition, were: James W. Wadsworth (R N.Y.), (cost and scope of program); Robert F. Rich (R Pa.), (cost); Robert Hale (R Maine), ("politics" in science); Fred L. Crawford (R Mich.), (socialistic program); John Jennings, Jr. (R Tenn.), (duplication, bureaucracy); Ralph E. Church (R Ill.), (cost and scope of program). H. R. Gross (R Iowa) objected to many portions of the bill.

Frank B. Keefe (R Wis.) raised questions about duplication of functions, and Kenneth B. Keating (R N.Y.) wanted cost limitations and safeguards for industry. Both announced their support of the bill after safeguarding amendments had been adopted.

Sponsors of the legislation argued that the Foundation would foster and correlate research in basic science — something which private industry, with its emphasis on applied science, does not and cannot do. They pointed out that the existence of such an organization before World War II might have saved us millions of dollars in development of the atomic bomb, and might have saved many lives lost because of ignorance of tropical diseases. Principal speakers for the bill were: Charles A. Wolverton (R N.J.); John W. McCormack (D Mass.); John W. Heselton (R Mass.), Andrew J. Biemiller (D Wis.), Joseph P. O'Hara (R Minn.), Emanuel Celler (D N.Y.), Carl Hinshaw (R Calif.), J. Percy Priest (D Tenn.)

Rep. Hale's motion to recommit the bill for further study was defeated on roll call, 134-240, and the House approved the bill, 247-126, March 1. The Senate measure, S 247, was then amended to contain the text of the House-passed bill, and was sent to conference.

CONFERENCE

The differing House and Senate versions of S. 247 were sent to conference March 28. Conferees were Sens. Elbert D. Thomas (D Utah), James E. Murray (D Mont.), Herbert H. Lehman (D N. Y.), Robert A. Taft (R Ohio), H. Alexander Smith (R N.J.), and Reps. J. Percy Priest (D Tenn.), Andrew J. Biemiller (D Wis.), George Howard Wilson (D Okla.), Carl Hinshaw (R Calif.) and Joseph P. O'Hara (R Minn.).

The conferees concentrated on the security provisions inserted into the bill by the lower chamber. Other amendments made by the House were relatively minor, and gave the conference committee little trouble.

On the security aspect, conferees faced a complaint by the Justice Department that the House amendment stipulatng FBI clearance of foreign associates in the Foundation would convert the FBI from an investigative agency into virtually a judge and jury charged to evaluate the evidence it might uncover.

The way the conference met this complaint was to permit FBI investigation of non-citizen associates, but permit the Foundation to make its own evaluation of any evidence resulting. This would apply to persons having access to atomic or military information especially.

This proved acceptable to the House. It adopted the conference report without objection on April 27. The Senate approved it April 28, sending the act to the White House.

LAW APPROVED

President Truman signed S. 247 into law on May 9, and called creation of the National Science Foundation "a major landmark in the history of science." He traced the events leading up to its establishment and pointed out that originally the Foundation was conceived as "an instrument in promoting reconstruction, and in maintaining our wartime momentum in scientific progress. The fact that the world has not found postwar security in no way lessens the need for the National Science Foundation. On the contrary, it underscores this need."

Truman said American ability to survive "depends to a very large degree upon our scientific progress" and said "We must maintain our leadership" in international science. Recounting his veto of the bill sent him with objectionable administrative provisions in 1947, the President said: "The present measure has satisfactorily met the objections I expressed to the earlier bill." He thanked the House and Senate for having "worked unselfishly to reconcile divergent views" that cropped up during Congressional action.

Foreign Economic Assistance Act

HR 7797 — P.L. 535

SUMMARY

The 81st Congress at its second session returned to the "single-package" approach to foreign economic assistance programs. Instead of dealing with each one separately as it had in 1949, the Congress rolled six of them together into one great measure, which carried authorizations totalling $3,127,450,000.

This legislation perpetuated: 1. The European Recovery Program, popularly known as the Marshall Plan and conducted by the Economic Cooperation Administration; 2. The "Little ECA" for the Republic of Korea; 3. Aid to China, principally in its non-Communist areas and adjacent regions; 4. United States participation in the United Nations program to aid refugees in Palestine; and 5. U. S. participation in a U. N. program designed to help destitute children throughout the world.

In addition, the legislation instituted a sixth program, to enlist American technical aid and services to help economically underdeveloped areas of the world. This was the "Point Four" program, so named because it was first enunciated by President Truman as Point Four of his Inaugural Address in 1949.

The Foreign Economic Assistance Act of 1950 extended the five programs already under way by amending the basic laws which had launched them originally. These basic laws were kept in force by moving the expiration dates ahead another year. Sections of these laws pertaining to funds authorized were revised, with sums being altered to reflect changed circumstances. For similar reasons, some provisions in the earlier legislation were dropped, and some new ones were added.

As passed by the Congress and signed by President Truman on June 5, the omnibus foreign economic aid measure contained five titles. A summary of each follows.

European Recovery Program

Title I extended the Marshall Plan for a third year and authorized the appropriation of $2,850,000,000 to finance it through June 30, 1951. The sum included $150,000,000 remaining from money granted the Economic Cooperation Administration in 1949. The total authorization originally asked by ECA for fiscal 1951 was $3.1 billion, including the $150 million "carry-over" sum.

Congress specified that $200 million of funds granted ECA could be used to guarantee private American investments in recipient countries against two risks: inability to convert earnings into dollars, and possible expropriation or confiscation of holdings by the foreign country involved. Interest rates were raised for the latter protection, written into the legislation as a new feature.

In a second major innovation to ERP legislation, the Congress cleared the way for the creation of a European Payments Union, to act as a central clearinghouse through which individual ECA countries could exchange their currencies on a multilateral basis. Previously, the various nations could only adjust currency negotiations bilaterally. In 1950 Congress earmarked $600 million for the Payments Union, and permitted the transfer to this central fund of counterpart funds furnished by recipient nations to match the dollar value of commodities sent them by the U. S.

Korean Aid

Title I also continued the "Little ECA" economic assistance program for the Republic of Korea for another year. The project was extended through June 30, 1951, and up to $100,000,000 was authorized to finance it. Terms and aims of the program were extended intact. The plan was first launched in Feb. 1949.

Aid To China

Title II of the legislation extended to June 30, 1951, the time in which the President could draw upon an unused fund of money previously appropriated for aid to China. The sum, estimated to total between $94 million and $100 million, was originally put at the President's disposal by a 1949 statute.

In 1950, however, the Congress specified that $40 million of this money should go to assist non-Communist forces in China and Formosa; $8 million "for relief on humanitarian grounds . . . to any place in China suffering from the effects of natural calamity"; $6 million for the relief of Chinese students stranded in the U. S.; and the remainder at the President's discretion to places in "the general area of China."

Palestine Refugees

Title III authorized the Secretary of State to make continuing contributions up to $27,450,000 to the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East. Such contributions could be made through June 30, 1951. The money would go, via the U. N., for the relief of persons, chiefly Arabs, displaced from their homes in Palestine during 1948 military operations in the Holy Land.

"Point Four" Program

Title IV inaugurated the President's program to aid economically underdeveloped areas of the world. Terms for launching this program were set forth under the title "Act For International Development." To get the program started, $35,000,000 was authorized for the project for its first year, ending June 30, 1951. The Administration originally had asked for $45,000,000.

Congress said that "by encouraging the exchange of technical knowledge and skills, and the flow of investment capital" to economically underdeveloped countries, their peoples could husband and develop their resources, and better their conditions. Policy considerations to govern the program were elaborately set forth.

Administrative procedures whereby backward countries, colonies, or dependencies could solicit technical U. S. aid and investment were spelled out. The way the U. S. could respond was presented. Numerous reasons for entering into agreements with applying nations — or terminating programs already in effect — were detailed.

The President was authorized to make grants or loans to further the aims of the program, and was also permitted to act jointly with international agencies, and other public and private U. S. groups, engaged in similar work.

No detailed mention was made, however, of the investment guaranty system envisaged for persons making capital available to underdeveloped countries seeking aid. This particular feature of the Point Four plan was dealt with separately by Congress. (See page 233).

Emergency Children's Fund

Title V authorized the appropriation to the President of $15,000,000 with which to make contributions during fiscal 1951 to United Nations agencies engaged in children's welfare work on an international scale.

Passage Through Congress

Repeated attempts were made to reduce the money authorizations in the omnibus foreign aid bill, some even before the legislation was submitted. Cries for economy were loudest in the Senate, but once the measure went before Congress, the House Foreign Affairs Committee acted first to reduce estimates of cash needed to finance the ERP.

Before approving the measure March 22, the House Committee decided that $1 billion of the new cash asked by ECA should be furnished in the form of surplus farm commodities and not in actual money. But when the lower chamber debated the ERP section of the legislation, Administration forces cited President Truman's opposition to this proposal, and were able to remove it from the bill. Other Administration - opposed policy amendments, such as one excluding Britain from Marshall aid so long as she maintained the partition of Ireland, were beaten back.

However, the House did effect a $250-million cut in money authorizations for ECA, and trimmed $20 million from the $45 million requested by the President for inauguration of his "Point Four" program. Attempts to kill the entire program failed, and the House passed its foreign economic assistance bill by a 287-86 roll - call vote March 31.

Slow Senate Action

In the Senate, the legislation had somewhat tougher going. It pended in the upper chamber for many weeks. Debate on it was sporadic, as other issues kept claiming Senate attention. In addition, partisan currents swirled around the subject. At one point, Sen. Arthur Vandenberg (R Mich.), formally called for a Congressional return to an "un-partisan" approach to the various foreign aid programs. In ill-health, Vandenberg was unable to attend the Senate during the period of ECA consideration, and both parties in the Senate agreed his absence contributed to the relatively sluggish and bitter progress of the legislation through the Senate.

While the bill was pending, a number of reports were issued by Sen. Pat McCarran (D Nev.), chairman of the joint Congressional "watchdog" committee on foreign aid programs. Each of these drew considerable debate and comment. Other issues which tended to deflect Senate concentration on the pending matter were proposals by Vandenberg and others that some thought should be given to what would take ERP's place when the program expired in 1952. Vandenberg suggested a commission to study means of continuing economic assistance to Western Europe, which he said would surely need it even after 1952. President Truman expressed his appreciation of the proposal in a personal letter to Vandenberg.

The Senate started voting on its version of the bill on May 5. As in the House, most of the discussion arose over moves to cut funds for the ERP. Senators rejected two amendments to reduce funds by $1 billion and $500 million, but then accepted one trimming funds by $250 million. This aligned the total ERP figure in the Senate bill with the sum in the House measure.

A crucial ballot was taken on the proposal to bring Spain into the ERP, and authorize a $50 million loan for that country. Administration force beat this attempt down, and similarly rejected other policy amendments opposed by the ECA and State Department.

Although many Senators tried to delete the portion of the legislation dealing with the Point Four program, the Administration won another victory over this, and the plan was approved, with $45 million authorized to get it started. The Senate then passed the omnibus bill on roll-call, 60 - 8, May 5.

Final Compromise

The differing House and Senate versions went to a joint conference committee May 9. Principal differences were over funds for the Point Four program, the investment guaranty system proposed for private investors sending money to ECA nations under the Marshall Plan, and use of $600 million for the European Payments Union to be set up under the ERP.

After a plea from President Truman for prompt action, the conference committee reconciled differences in the bills. The difference between the $25 million favored by the House for the Point Four program and the $45 million favored by the Senate was split, conferees agreeing on $35 million. The investment guaranty system, and restrictions on the money for the Payments Union, were framed in compromise forms acceptable to both houses of Congress.

The House approved the conference report May 23 by a 248-88 roll - call vote. The Senate followed suit May 25 with a 47-27 roll-call vote, after three days of debate on unsuccessful proposals to return the legislation to conference for deletion of the entire Point Four program.

President Truman signed the legislation June 5.

Provisions

TITLE I. "ECONOMIC COOPERATION ACT OF 1950."

(The following provisions from the 1950 extension law either add new sections to the law which originally launched the European Recovery Program in 1948, or alter statutes which have since kept the ERP in operation. For basic provisions unaffected by those in the 1950 extension measure, see CQ Almanac, Vol. V, pp. 334-5.)

Extends the ERP through June 30, 1951, and authorizes the appropriation of $2,700,000,000 in new money to finance it through this period. Permits the use during this span of $150,000,000 remaining out of money granted ERP in 1949, thus bringing total of funds the Economic Cooperation Administration is authorized to handle during fiscal 1951 to $2,850,000,000.

Puts Congress on record as favoring, in Europe, "a large domestic market with no internal barriers to trade or to the free movement of persons." The latter phrase was new.

Permits a total of $200,000,000 worth of guaranties to be made to underwrite private investments in ECA countries against (1) inability of investors to convert earnings from their foreign investments into dollars; and (2) losses of investments through expropriation or confiscation. Previous total was $150,000,000.

Stipulates that the ECA shall charge a fee of one per cent for guaranties against risks of unconvertability, but four per cent for guaranties against losses due to expropriation or confiscation.

Clears the way for creation of a European Payments Union, to act as a central currency clearing - house for participating countries "to facilitate the development of transferability of European currencies, or to promote the liberalization of trade." The EPU supplants the former intra-European payments plan of ERP, under which nations made currency adjustments bilaterally.

Earmarks $600 million for the European Payments Union, and permits the transfer of certain "counterpart" funds to it.

Recharges the Administration to provide for procurement of commodities within the U. S. in ways that will minimize "the burden on the American taxpayer, by reducing the amount of dollar purchases by the participating countries to the greatest extent possible . . ."

Repeals the specific requirements that oil purchases for ERP be made outside of the U. S. so far as practical.

Repeals the requirement that 12.5 per cent of all wheat shipped abroad under the program go in the shape of flour, but pegs prices of wheat to be shipped ERP nations also signatory to the International Wheat Agreement to current values and prices of wheat as established by that Agreement, if wheat shipped is credited to recipient countries' guaranteed purchases under this Agreement.

Restates the prohibition against ECA paying higher prices for commodities procured in the U. S. than prices prevailing here, but exempts "the purchase of raw cotton in bales" from this ban.

Declares that "it is the sense of Congress" that no recipient country shall "discriminate against citizens of the U. S. or any corporation" substantially controlled by Americans by imposing "any import, currency, tax, license, quota, or other similar business restrictions" on U. S. exports abroad.

Permits the President to use money from the main ECA fund in order to meet expenses otherwise unprovided for in the rehabilitation of Germany, including the furnishing of minimum civilian supplies to prevent starvation, disease and unrest.

Provides for the transfer into a special account of the GARIOA (Government and Relief In Occupied Areas) agency, German currency funds already deposited in an account set up under a previous bilateral agreement between the U. S. and the West German government.

Reaffirms charge to ECA to "encourage emigration from participating countries having permanent surplus manpower to areas, particularly underdeveloped and dependent areas, where such manpower can be effectively utilized."

Recharges the ECA to use certain counterpart funds to secure "full and continuous publicity" in recipient countries to inform their populations of the aid "furnished by the American taxpayer".

Amends the "Far Eastern Economic Assistance Act of 1950" passed earlier in the session to keep a "Little ECA" going for the Republic of Korea. (See page 223). This program was authorized to continue through June 30, 1951, and an appropriation of $100,000,000 was authorized to be granted.

TITLE II. "CHINA AREA AID ACT OF 1950."

Extends to June 30, 1951, the permission granted the President by a 1949 statute to draw upon an unused fund previously appropriated for aid to China. This fund was estimated to total from $94,000,000 to $100,000,000.

Stipulates the following general distribution of any monies drawn from this fund: $40 million for non-Communist forces in China and Formosa; $8 million "for relief on humanitarian grounds through the American Red Cross or other voluntary relief agencies in any place in China suffering from the effects of natural calamity", notably famine; and $6 million for the relief of Chinese students stranded in the U. S. by the deposition of their Nationalist government. The remainder could be disbursed at the President's discretion to places "in the general area of China".

TITLE III. "UNITED NATIONS PALESTINE REFUGEE AID ACT OF 1950."

Authorizes the Secretary of State "to make contributions from time to time before July 1, 1951, to the United Nations for the 'United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East' established under the resolution of the General Assembly of the United Nations of December 8, 1949 . . ."

Authorizes the appropriation of $27,450,000 for the American contribution to this U. N. body devoted to aiding and rehabilitating persons, chiefly Arabs, displaced from their homes in Palestine by 1948 military operations.

Permits the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to advance the U. N. $8 million in the interim before appropriations are actually granted.

TITLE IV. "ACT FOR INTERNATIONAL DEVELOPMENT."

Asserts that "efforts of the peoples living in economically underdeveloped areas of the world to realize their full capabilities and to develop the resources of the lands in which they live can be furthered through the cooperative endeavor of all nations to exchange technical knowledge and skills and to encourage the flow of investment capital". Knowledge, skills and investment, however, can be effective only when accompanied by "due respect for the legitimate interests of the peoples" in recipient countries, and when investors conserve as well as develop local resources, "bear a fair share of local taxes, and observe local laws, and provide adequate wages and working conditions for local labor". Asserts recipient countries must extend investors certain freedoms to operate their enterprises, and protect them against personal or property jeopardy, or discrimination.

Declares it is "the policy of the United States to aid the efforts of the peoples of economically underdeveloped areas" to develop their resources and better their conditions "by encouraging the exchange of technical knowledge and skills and the flow of investment capital . . . "

Authorizes creation of an advisory board to further this policy. Board to consist of 13 members drawn from business, labor, agricultural, public health, and education fields, to be appointed by the President. One member of Board to be its chairman, after confirmation by the Senate.

Authorizes the President to appoint, subject to Senate confirmation, a person "responsible for planning, implementing and managing the program". This official may answer to the Secretary of State or any other person designated by the President. Salary set at $15,000 per annum.

$35,000,000 Authorized

Authorizes the appropriation of $35,000,000 to put the program into operation, and run it through June 30, 1951, for its first year. Includes, within this total authorization, "any sums appropriated to carry on the activities of the Institute of Inter-American Affairs, and technical cooperation programs as defined . . . under the United States Information and Educational Exchange Act of 1948." (See CQ Almanac, Vol. IV, page 196).

Specifies that the U. S., when "reviewing requests of foreign governments" for aid under this program, shall consider whether the technical assistance requested is "appropriate", whether works or facilities contemplated "are actually needed", and whether "private capital is available either in the country or elsewhere upon reasonable terms and in sufficient amounts to finance such projects."

Directs the President to plan, launch and administer bilateral technical cooperation programs, and, in so doing, to coordinate existing ones, and to assist other interested governments in making plans for the development of resources and productive capacities of economically underdeveloped areas.

Technical Cooperation

Permits the President to make "advances and grants in aid of technical cooperation programs to any person, corporation, or other body of persons, or to any foreign government" to carry out the aims of the program. Funds to come from the appropriations made for the project.

Permits the making of contracts or agreements between the U. S. and other nations, provided that contract authorizations involving funds "run for not to exceed three years in any one case."

Sketches procedures whereby administrative units shall be set up to implement the program: "At the request of a foreign country, there may be established a joint commission for economic development to be composed of persons named by the President and persons to be named by the requesting country." Representatives of international organizations may sit with the commission if agreeable to both major parties.

Charges such joint commissions to examine the requesting country's requirements, "resources and potentialities", and domestic "policies which will remove deterrents" to successful operation of the program.

Specifies that "the costs of each joint commission shall be borne by the U. S. and the requesting country" in an agreed-upon ratio.

Requires joint commissions to make full and complete reports, and to include recommendations. Reports may be printed and published outside the continental U. S.

Requires the U. S. when weighing requests for technical aid to measure prospects for successful assistance by assessing willingness of applicants to "encourage flow of productive local and foreign investment capital" and to spur the development of "colonies, possessions, dependencies, and non-self-governing territories" so that these may contribute more to realization of the technical assistance program.

Share In Cost

Warns recipient nations that assistance shall be available only if they pay "a fair share of the cost of the program, provide all necessary information concerning such program and give the program full publicity," seek to coordinate local technical development projects, and cooperate with "other countries . . . in the mutual exchange of technical knowledge and skills."

Enables the President also to make "contributions to the United Nations" for technical aid programs that body handles, and authorizes the United States "to participate in multilateral technical cooperation programs carried on by the United Nations, the Organization of American States, and their related organizations, and by other international organizations, wherever practicable."

Allows federal agencies to "furnish services and such facilities as may be necessary" to international organizations requesting them, after receiving Presidential approval.

Party Stands

From the Democratic platform in the 1948 election: "We pledge a sound, humanitarian administration of the Marshall Plan."

From the Republican platform: "Within the prudent limits of our own economic welfare, we shall cooperate, on a basis of self-help and mutual aid, to assist other peace-loving nations to restore their economic independence and the human rights and fundamental freedoms for which we fought two wars and upon which dependable peace must build. We shall insist on businesslike and efficient administration of all foreign aid."

BACKGROUND

After General George C. Marshall, then Secretary of State, outlined in 1947 an American willingness to consider how it could best help Europe to help itself recover economically from the war, 16 Western European nations met in Paris to draw up their needs. These were sifted by several U. S. groups and commissions in and out of Congress, and early in 1948, the House and the Senate were hard at work on the Administration-drawn legislation authorizing the "Marshall Plan" for European recovery.

Congress attempted to strike a balance between what the 16 participating nations could use, and what the U. S. economy could safely extend them. Once this had been determined, the next step was devising the actual machinery for aid. An Economic Cooperation Administration was created, with its powers and liaison with the State Department and other agencies of U. S. foreign policy elaborately defined.

To insure that the aid envisaged by the U. S. under the European Recovery Program (as the Marshall Plan became known) was used as intended, a system of agreements was drawn, whereby each recipient country concluded a pact with the U. S. concerning ERP assistance. These agreements spelled out conditions under which aid could be terminated, in the ERP law ultimately passed.

The agreements and the law itself emphasized that the ERP was not to be a relief program, but a reconstruction one. Its success would depend on the abilities of the recipient countries to make the best use of what they received.

The machinery created by the Congress was geared to a program that would run through June 30, 1952. However, because of its reluctance to bind successive Congresses, the 80th Congress approved the program for one year only, through June, 1949.

When this initial year was up in 1949, the first session of the 81st Congress extended the program for another year. It authorized $5,530,000,000 to finance the program through June 30, 1950, making no reductions in ECA budget requests.

The 1949 extension law also provided $150 million in guarantees to protect private investments by Americans in ECA countries under the terms of the aid plan. The numerous provisions added to the 1948 law by the 1949 extension amendment reflected the desire of Congress to correct "bugs" or clarify ambiguities that had come to light during the first year of ERP's operation.

OTHER AID BACKGROUND

The ERP was extended in 1949 by legislation focussed on this program exclusively. There was only one title to the extension bill. The first session of the 81st Congress did not favor the "single - package" approach to foreign aid, and dealt separately with the Greek - Turkish, Korean, and other foreign assistance projects. Background on these follows:

Palestine Refugees

The Congress in 1949 authorized the President to contribute $16 million to the United Nations fund financing the relief of some 479,000 Palestine refugees, chiefly Arabs, displaced from their homes by 1947-8 warfare in the Holy Land. There was virtually no controversy around the bill. (See CQ Almanac, Vol. V, page 361.)

China Aid

Because millions of dollars remained on hand in 1949 out of funds appropriated in 1948 for an economic assistance program for non-Communist China, the 81st Congress at its first session authorized the President to make use of this money during fiscal 1950. Certain policy features connected with far eastern help were worked into the measure giving this authority. (See CQ Almanac, Vol. V, page 375.)

Korean Aid

Just before Congress adjourned in 1949, the Senate voted a $150 million "Little ECA" program for the Republic of Korea. The measure failed to get House action. Nevertheless, a total of $60 million was appropriated in 1949 for the President to use in helping the new nation, which also received military aid under the Mutual Defense Assistance Act of 1949. (See CQ Almanac, Vol. V. page 382.)

International Children's Fund

Continued U.S. contributions totalling $25 million to the International Children's Emergency Fund were made possible by a law passed in July, 1949, but a stipulation was made that after June, 1950, the U. S. should cease its participation in the emergency program. (See CQ Almanac Vol. V, page 386.)

Point Four Program

This plan to help economically underdeveloped areas of the world was first enunciated by President Truman as Point Four of his inaugural address in January, 1949. During the first session, several different bills to implement the program and its various aspects were before the Congress. None received final action. However, extensive hearings were held on all, with a host of witnesses appearing. Debate on the program continued throughout the session. (See CQ Almanac, Vol. V, page 392.)

PRE-SESSION DISCUSSION

Even before the second session of the 81st Congress got under way, the prospect of extending ERP another year was drawing considerable comment — all with an economy theme — from lawmakers.

On Dec. 12, Senate Majority Leader Scott W. Lucas (D Ill.) predicted that the Marshall Plan would be extended for a third year, but admitted the big conflict in 1950 would be over funds to finance it. Lucas said he favored some kind of reduction in ECA appropriations, if it could be made "without crippling the program."

On Dec. 21, Sen. Arthur H. Vandenberg (R Mich.) predicted that foreign aid funds would be "sharply reduced." He did not cite any figure as a goal. Vandenberg re-emphasized his faith in the continuing necessity for a bipartisan approach to foreign affairs.

Estimates of how much could be lopped off varied. Chairman Tom Connally (D Tex.) of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee said Congress would trim funds by $1 billion at least. Sens. John L. McClellan (D Ark.) and John Stennis (D Miss.) agreed with this figure. Sen. Pat McCarran (D Nev.), chairman of the joint Congressional "watchdog" committee on the Marshall Plan, said he thought a $3 billion slash should be made over the next two years, to keep European countries from becoming too dependent on U. S. help. Sens. A. Willis Robertson (D Va.), Kenneth McKellar (D Tenn.) and Burnet Maybank (D S.C.) recommended cutbacks in 1950 funds for ECA to $2.5 billion or less. Sen. Dennis Chavez (D N.M.) has said he wanted to halve money for the program. Among Republicans urging cuts were Rep. Daniel A. Reed (N.Y.) and Sens. Homer Ferguson (Mich.), and Edward J. Thye (Minn.).

Inspection Tours

Many of these views reflected convictions acquired in Europe by solons who had gone there to inspect the situation first hand. About one third of the Senate went abroad during the first session of the 81st Congress, and most made inquiries about the use of American aid in the countries which they visited. Several, primarily Sen. Elmer Thomas (D Okla.) and William E. Jenner (R Ind.), returned highly critical of ECA operations abroad. Thomas was chairman of a Senate Appropriations Subcommittee investigating use of ECA and MAP funds in Europe. Jenner was a member of another Senate Appropriations Subcommittee which investigated use of U. S. funds throughout the world.

Other Senators in the Thomas group were Stennis, Robertson, Chavez, McClellan, Maybank and Thye. Sen. Allen J. Ellender (D La.) was chairman of the appropriations group which went around the world. Ferguson and Theodore F. Green (D R.I.) joined Ellender and Jenner on this trip.

Cuts Proposed

But the demand for cuts in foreign aid expenditures was not limited to this group. Vandenberg, who helped the President maintain a bipartisan foreign policy in the Senate, renewed his call for economy in the 1950 foreign aid budget. "Never let us forget," he stated, "that so-called foreign aid is dictated by our own intelligent self-interest in our own free peace and security." At the same time, he said, "The greatest of all economy in lives and dollars is to stop another war before it starts or to win it if it comes."

Chairman McKellar of the Senate Appropriations Committee also suggested cuts in European recovery spending for the coming year. "Apparently everybody, including Hoffman, realizes there should be a cut in ECA funds," he stated. Paul Hoffman is ECA chief. McKellar said that he was prepared to heed the advice of his committee members who toured Europe.

Minority Leader Kenneth S. Wherry (R Neb.) recommended that only enough money be provided to continue the Marshall Plan "to permit a transition from gifts and grants for a resumption of private enterprise" in Western Europe.

Calls for cuts increased when, five days before the Congress reconvened, the ECA announced that its programs had passed the $8 billion mark. On Jan. 2, the Commerce Department declared that foreign policy spending had reached about $30 billion since mid-1945.

Still another boost for economy-seekers was furnished by news of Britain's recognition of the Chinese Communist regime. Sens. Robert A.

Taft (R Ohio), Owen Brewster (R Maine), Henry C. Dworshak (R Idaho), Harry F. Byrd (D Va.) and Rep. Clarence Cannon (D Mo.) asked Jan. 7 for cuts in ECA funds, of which Britain receives the major share.

Preliminary Hearings

On Jan. 10, Secretary of State Dean Acheson went before the Senate Foreign Relations Committee to give it a full-dress depiction of the international situation. Then, to give Senators the ERP picture specifically ECA Administrator Paul Hoffmar went before them Feb. 7.

Although the Administration had filed a $3.1 billion budget estimate of the cost of the Marshall Plan's third year, Hoffman indicated his agency might ask for less when it made its final request. Senate Foreign Relations Chairman Connally, who quoted Hoffman's testimony before an executive session of the group, said however, that the ECA chief warned that "drastic cuts in ECA funds" would be a "great tragedy" if they impaired the recovery program's effectiveness.

At the closed meeting, Hoffman discussed with Senators progress of Marshall plan nations toward removing trade and certain currency barriers, and noted some encouraging signs. "Hoffman says this (removing blocks to a freer flow of European trade) is the lasting contribution that ECA can make," Connally reported.

Meanwhile, Sens. H. Alexander Smith (R N.J.) and Homer Ferguson (R Mich.) said a victory in Britain of Winston Churchill's Conservative Party over the incumbent Labor regime would "make it much easier" for Congress to grant more ECA money to Britain with more confidence. Smith said many Congressmen did not agree with Labor's nationalization of industries, nor with Labor's economic and social policies.

HOUSE

Committee

The House Foreign Affairs Committee met with the Senate Foreign Relations Committee on February 21 to hear Secretary of State Dean Acheson and ECA Administrator Paul Hoffman state the case for continued aid. Both presented extension as part of the struggle to check the spread of Soviet power in Western Europe.

Hoffman sa'd Moscow's "schemes for world domination will be given terrible impetus" by any halt in American aid or in Western European recovery. Acheson said the Kremlin was pursuing its course with "increasing boldness" and has won some "major successes", said continued ECA funds are "doubly urgent" in the context of what he called "the present world crisis."

Both sought authorization of a working fund of $2.95 billion — $150 million less than President Truman's budget request of $3.1 billion — and authority to divert upwards of $600 million to an intra-European currency pool to facilitate trade and payments among the ECA participant nations. Chairman Connally of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, had explained prior to the hearings that the ECA expected to have about $100 million left over from the 1949-50 program and these funds would be carried over into the new year's program if Congress approved. The request was $1.3 billion less than the appropriation grant for the previous fiscal year.

Hoffman Testimony

Acheson and Hoffman emphasized in their testimony that the United States would have to increase its imports from Europe to close Europe's gap in outgoing and incoming dollars and make the recovery program a lasting success. Hoffman said the Europeans would have to earn about $1 billion more a year from sales in the United States to bring the dollar gap to "manageable proportions" in 1952, when ECA was scheduled to end. He conceded this meant some competition with American industries, but said the most that Europe could sell here in competitive goods would be less than one per cent of the total American output. The ECA Administrator said he was "disappointed" but not discouraged about progress of economic integration of Western Europe, and that he believed the countries under consideration would have made major steps toward creation of a single market by 1952.

Hearings were then continued separately, witnesses going back and forth between the Senate Committee's room, where S 3101 was being studied, and the House group's chamber, where the companion measure, HR-7378, was under consideration.

Acheson Testimony

Secretary Acheson continued his testimony before the House Foreign Affairs Committee Feb. 21. He told Abraham A. Ribicoff (D Conn.), that "I don't think American aid will end for the world, and certainly some parts of Europe, in 1952. The Administration takes the view it (the ECA) will end then, but other programs will not end then." He said he would rather not name the countries where he felt foreign aid had to be continued.

W. Averell Harriman, special representative for the ECA, told the Committee Feb. 22 that ECA had brought about the decline of Communist influence in Western Europe, and he cited recent election defeats for Communists in Norway, Western Germany Belgium and Austria.

Hoffman then warned the group Feb. 24 that it would be "an immoral act" to require nations of Western Europe to accept Marshall Plan aid in the form of repayable loans because such loans could never be collected. His admonition came after John M. Vorys (R Ohio) suggested that "a large part" of the $2.95 billion requested go in loans instead of grants and that European nations liberalize their trade practices in order to get their share.

On Feb. 28, James P. Richards (D S.C.) was critical of Britain for allegedly failing to "give and take" in the world struggle for economic recovery. He said Britain hampered the expansion of world trade by seeking to protect the Dominion sterling area. Richards' remarks came after W. John Kenney, ECA chief in Britain, said an increase in British exports to this country "is in our own self-interest."

Tax Reform Asked

Meanwhile, a subcommittee of the Foreign Affairs body urged the ECA to "press insistently for tax reform in France and Italy" and it urged further Marshall plan funds for those two countries and Great Britain. These recommendations were in a report by Joseph L. Pfeifer (D N.Y.), Thomas S. Gordon (D Ill.), Clement J. Zablocki (D Wis.) and Jacob K. Javits (R N.Y.), who made an on-the-spot study of the three countries the previous Fall.

Among other witnesses asking the Committee to give ECA new funds was Gen. William J. Donovan, wartime head of the Office of Strategic Services, who March 6 said Marshall Plan aid must be continued in Europe "to secure our flank in the West while we take the initiative in Asia."

The Committee took up its bill (HR 7378) in executive session March 16, after hearing L. Dan Jones, counsel for the Independent Petroleum Association, urge dropping a provision that would have required the agency to buy oil when possible outside the United States. He said ERP oil purchases in the Middle East and Venezuela have built up surplus production that "seriously threatens our domestic industry."

Omar Burleson (D Tex.) added that the domestic industry "would be willing for ECA to make all of its purchases in the Middle East or Venezuela if that wouldn't result in a dumping of surplus production in this country."

"Point Four" Hearings

Early in 1950, the House Committee resumed hearings on two "Point Four" bills which had been before them at the close of the first session, and on which extensive hearings had already been held. (See CQ Almanac, Vol. V, page 392). The first of these bills (HR 5615) was the original Administration measure prepared by the State Department. The second (HR 6026) was a substitute prepared by a group of Republicans headed by Rep. Christian A. Herter (R Mass.).

Chairman John Kee (D W. Va.) of the Foreign Affairs group combined features of both of these bills into one new measure. Willard L. Thorp, Assistant Secretary of State, and Herter gave their endorsement Jan. 17 to the compromise. Herter tagged the new plan "extremely good."

The new bill (HR 6834) was subsequently introduced Jan. 18 by Chairman Kee. House hearings on the Point Four program were concluded with presentation of the compromise draft. The bipartisan - supported HR 6834 spelled out in greater detail than the previous measures the operation of the proposed Point Four program and attempted to reconcile the views of those who wanted the plan operated through the United Nations and those who wanted this country to do it alone. Invited to take part in the program were the United Nations, other international organizations and their related agencies, as well as private agencies "wherever practicable."

When the U. S. acted alone, under HR 6834, assistance could be given only when the country being aided paid a fair share of the cost, provided necessary information concerning the program, gave it full publicity, and cooperated with other countries receiving aid in the mutual exchange of technical knowledge and skills.

Advisory Board

In a statement of Congressional policy, the bill sought to remove fears of discrimination against United States private investors or seizure of their property without prompt compensation. The new bill provided for a public advisory board of a dozen private citizens under a government official as chairman.

Though the legislation fixed no ceiling on the amount this country may put up, either directly or indirectly, Thorp told the committee the estimated cost of the program to the U. S. ranged from $35 to $45 million for the first year.

The Committee approved HR 6834 Feb. 16, after clapping the $45 million ceiling on expeditures that could be made in carrying out the program.

However, still more changes were made in this measure before it was reported, and the House group decided to submit a "clean" bill embodying all of the alterations. Accordingly, HR 7346 was drafted, and introduced by Chairman Kee. The major change contained in this new measure—the Administration's third effort to produce legislation launching the Point Four program — was one authorizing the President to by-pass the State Department in determining who should execute the Point Four program. Conduct of the plan, said the third bill, should be tested in an Institute of International Technical Cooperation —but the bill did not specify in which existing agency or federal department the Institute should be housed.

The "clean bill" (HR 7346) itself never did receive floor action. Ultimately the Committee put it into HR 7378—the original ERP-extension bill, which subsequently was incorporated into HR 7797, the omnibus foreign aid bill reported to the House March 22.

Bill Reported

The House Foreign Affairs Committee reported HR 7797 on March 22. The measure authorized $1,950 million in new money for the ECA.

Although it lopped $1 billion off the cash request of the Administration, the House Committee directed that an equivalent amount of surplus farm commodities be furnished recipient nations. The Commodity Credit Corporation would make the surpluses available, and determine their value on the basis of open market prices. Distribution among recipients would be based on actual need.

The bill authorized the ECA to spend $150 million in funds left over from the previous year's appropriations. An additional $100 million in unspent funds previously appropriated for China-aid were authorized to be spent by the President through June 30, 1951.

The measure also approved $100 million for economic aid to Korea, beginning July 1, 1950.

Of the China money, the House measure earmarked $60 million for the "general area", $6 million for help to stranded Chinese students in the U. S., and the balance for non-Communist China.

In addition, the one-package House bill on foreign aid authorized $27,450,000 for the relief of Arab refugees in Palestine, and $45 million for the Point Four program to assist underdeveloped areas of the world. Included in this sum were $10 million for the Institute of Inter-American Affairs.

The House bill also authorized the use of $600 million out of new ECA funds for currency clearing house in Western Europe to increase the flow of trade and ease trade barriers there. No change was made in the ECA's request for this feature.

However, the House group specified mandatory use of the full $600 million for this purpose. It also set aside $300 million in new authorizations to guarantee private investments made abroad under the ECA program against risks of inconvertibility back into dollars. Earnings and profits, as well as losses arising from nationalization or confiscation, were assured convertibility.

In a policy feature, the House bill urged the ECA to encourage emigration from Marshall Plan countries —especially Italy — having a surplus of manpower, to ease unemployment which had been hindering economic recovery.

Committee Vote

After the bill had been reported, Chairman Kee disclosed that the Foreign Affairs Committee decided to make the $1 billion cut in new ECA cash after a 10-7 vote which went across party - lines.

The amendment cutting funds $1 billion was offered by John Vorys (R Ohio), who also tried — but unsuccessfully — to secure deletion from the bill of the authority for ECA to spend the $150 million in funds carried over from the previous year.

The amendment in Committee stipulating mandatory use of $600 million earmarked for a European currency clearing system was offered by James P. Richards (D S.C.)

Debate

The House started debate on HR 7797 March 24, after it had voted 262-22 to approve a resolution permitting only six hours general discussion of the measure. Leading off for Administration forces, Foreign Affairs Committee Chairman Kee turned to the first title of the bill — extending the Marshall Plan — and urged its adoption because the ERP already "has stopped the Communists in their tracks."

Ranking minority committeeman Charles A. Eaton (R.N.J.) told the House the ERP "represents one of the greatest contributions to the security and hopes of mankind", and bolstered Kee's appeal.

In short order, the House plunged into debate on the Committee-backed proposal by John M. Vorys (R Ohio) requiring $1 billion of the $2.95 billion in cash requested by the ECA go in the form of surplus farm commodities purchased from the Commodity Credit Corporation. As this feature was studied, President Truman appealed March 25 to lawmakers to "strike a blow for peace" by approving the full cash amount requested and eschewing the Vorys plan.

The President's plea, in a letter to Kee, called the $2.95 billion figure a minimum one, and indicated anything less "would do irreparable damage" to U.S. foreign policy. Cutting the amount as proposed by Vorys and the Committee, Truman implied, would be risky economy. "We will save nothing if we ignore the needs of other nations now, only to find that the result is World War III," he commented from Key West, Fla., where he was sojourning.

Truman also registered strong support of the other foreign aid authorizations in the single - package bill, saying "passage of this act will strengthen all nations threatened with intimidation, subversion or aggression."

Cut Restored

Harold D. Cooley (D N.C.), Chairman of the House Agriculture Committee, led the attack on the Vorys proposal, calling it "a hoax and a humbug." Vorys retorted that the farm bloc was behind the attacks — "I appeal to them to lay off foreign aid — do it on your own time and money."

General debate ended with various members reiterating the positions they had taken on Marshall aid since its inception two years back, and voting commenced on particular features of the measure.

The first try to amend the bill came March 28 when James G. Fulton (R Pa.) attempted to erase the Vorys proposal by restoring the $1 billion in cash it had deleted. The amendment was approved by a 178-87 standing vote. But the Administration victory had been diluted by an earlier and also successful move by Francis Case (R S.D.) which lopped $250 million off the $1 billion restoration the Fulton move originally specified. Net restoration was thus $750,000,000.

An amendment by Lawrence H. Smith (R Wis.) to cut $500 million from the Fulton figure was defeated 137-152, and the ECA portion of HR 7797 was over its first monetary hurdles. A series of minor amendments also met defeat.

But the entire money section of the bill relating to ECA was again revised March 29 when the House approved, 119-107, an amendment by Omar Burleson (D Tex.) which also touched on the farm products question. The accepted motion required that, out of the $2.7 billion still in the bill for ECA operation, $1 billion be earmarked to buy U. S. farm surpluses. The CCC was not mentioned.

Beating back Administration efforts to change the Burleson amendment itself, the House moved on to vote 99-66 in favor of a move by John E. Fogarty (D R.I.) to ban aid to Britain so long as she maintains the partition of Ireland. The House cheered when the decision was announced, but Administration leaders termed the vote capricious, and "terribly importunate." They predicted strong efforts to reverse the decision. The Fogarty amendment did not mention Britain or Ireland by name.

Post-ERP Aid?

While the House was considering the ERP-extension measure, considerable Congressional comment was excited by Sen. Vandenberg's proposal in a letter to ECA chief Hoffman on March 25 that the latter should make an "unpartisan" study of what the U. S. should undertake in foreign aid after the Marshall Plan expires in 1952.

Sen. William F. Knowland (R Calif.) applauded the idea. Sen. John J. Sparkman (D Ala.) said it was pretty well understood that some kind of program would have to be surveyed to follow ECA. Sen. Robertson said Germany and Greece would still present vital problems after the last ECA payments in 1952.

Sen. Taft summed it up March 27. Joining in with Vandenberg's proposal, Taft said "there is no doubt in my mind that we will have to continue to give some kind of aid to anti-Communist nations after the Marshall plan ends." Taft said "an impartial commission should study the needs" of such nations.

The same day President Truman made the unusual gesture of writing Vandenberg a personal letter of appreciation from the Winter White House in Key West, Fla. The text was not made public.

Rep. Vorys expressed disfavor with the Vandenberg proposal. Vorys said the proposal was "very poorly timed from a psychological viewpoint" because it could weaken the incentive of recipients to make the most of the aid they are getting now — if they felt more would follow after 1952. The Vandenberg proposal in detail called for a nonpartisan committee patterned on the Harriman Committee which explored the question of a Marshall Plan in 1947.

Nevertheless, Rep. Javits sponsored an amendment to the pending HR 7797, which would have implemented the Vandenberg idea. The amendment was defeated by a 21-80 standing vote.

Point Four Fight

When the House had passed through the part of HR 7797 extending the ERP, it rapidly disposed of aid to Korea, China, Arab refugees, and destitute children in war-ravished areas. The chief fight was then joined on the issue of the "Point Four" program.

Repeated efforts were made by some Republicans to delete the program altogether. It was flayed as a global blueprint for a "world-wide WPA". Congressmen of this persuasion were able to obtain a $20 million cut in the $45 million proposal but were unable to kill the program outright.

Spearheading the Administration's successful fight to preserve the President's program was Speaker of the House Sam Rayburn (D Tex.) He grounded his appeals for passage on the thesis that the program would strengthen peoples throughout the world whose friendship the United States needed.

When the "Committee of the Whole" had completed debate on all titles of the omnibus measure, and had voted on all offered amendments, it rose, and resubmitted the legislation to the House proper for final, formal disposition. Three amendments acted upon in the Committee of the Whole were put to separate tests. Only one, that of Fulton to restore $750 million in cash to ERP authorizations previously trimmed, was approved by the entire lower chamber, 254-38 on a standing vote, March 31.

The other two were rejected. They were moves to specify that $1 billion of ERP money be spent for surplus farm commodities in the United States, and to curb aid to Britain so long as she maintained the partition of Ireland. The farm product amendment was rejected 70-198, and the so-called "Irish amendment" by a 60-226 ballot. Both tests came on standing votes, March 31.

A motion by Lawrence Smith (R Wis.) to recommit the entire omnibus foreign aid legislation to committee, with instructions to the group to resubmit it minus the Point Four program, was defeated 150-220 on roll call March 31.

Immediately, the House approved HR 7797 by a 187-86 roll-call vote.

AMENDMENTS AGREED TO:

Francis Case (R S. D.) — Cut $250 million out of the $2.95 billion figure specified for ECA's operation in a pending amendment offered by James G. Fulton (R Pa.). Division vote, 155-141, and teller vote, 165-163.

James G. Fulton (R Pa.) — Strike out provision in the Committee bill requiring that $1 billion of $2.95 billion asked for ECA go in the form of surplus farm commodities, and replace this requirement with authorization of $2.7 billion in cash for ECA. This was Fulton's amendment after it had been altered, in turn, by the Case proposal. Division, 178-87.

S., provided they are not in short supply; but not banning purchase of canned agricultural products used in connection with anti-foot and mouth disease control program. Division, 90-88, and teller vote, 119-107.

SENATE

Committee

ECA Administrator Hoffman opened formal hearings on the Marshall Plan before the Senate Foreign Relations Committee Feb. 22, continuing testimony started during the joint House-Senate hearings Feb. 21. Hoffman said the purpose of the proposed $500-$600 million currency pool would be to settle a part of the deficits incurred by individual Marshall plan countries in intra-European trade, after the accounts were balanced in the central clearing house. The European countries themselves would pay in gold or in dollars part of the deficit, he pointed out; the U. S. now pays the whole sum.

He suggested a program of unemployment insurance and job training for American workers who might be thrown out of their jobs by $1-billion-a-year imports of European goods in this country. He told Senators that "all this concern" by U. S. industry about adjusting itself to meet competition is not a compliment to management. He said "the necessary shifts will be made by management to meet the problem. If they don't, they would go out of business anyway." Sen. Henry Cabot Lodge, Jr. (R Mass.) retorted that "A policy of the devil take the hindmost is not a sensible policy either."

Hoffman was emphatic in warning the Committee against any new strings to European recovery funds. This was apparent in his reply to Lodge's demand to know why Congress should not condition further ECA grants on positive action by Marshall plan governments toward integration through removal of trade and payments restrictions. Hoffman said "shotgun methods" would not produce a "happy or effective" integration.

Acheson Testifies

The next day, Feb. 23, Acheson returned to the Hill to appear this time before the Senate group. He told Sen. H. Alexander Smith (R. N.J.) no program such as ECA was contemplated by the Administration for southeast Asia, but said this did not preclude the possibility of some kind of cooperative assistance enterprise for the region. He also said: 1. Russia's possession of the atomic bomb "increases the difficulties" of European recovery. 2. He would not commit himself to giving aid to Formosa after June 30, but said the Administration expected to continue Korean aid next year. 3. The State Department was sending a mission to Indo-China to confer with the government of Emperor Bao Dai.

The Committee ended hearings February 28, then decided the next day on request of Sen. Lodge to reopen them for another look at Great Britain's purchase of American oil. Lodge said he wanted to learn more about reports that half the ECA aid for England goes to purchase oil that could be bought in the sterling area. He had previously clashed heatedly on the subject with Chairman Connally.

The exchange between Connally and Lodge arose over the question of increased American imports from Europe. The Committee was hearing testimony from W. John Kenney, chief of the ECA mission to Great Britain, when Connally, from a major oil-producing state, criticized England for its curb on the import of oil from the dollar area. Lodge remarked that it was "inconceivable" to him that this country should encourage British textile exports to this country while providing Great Britain with ECA dollars to buy American oil, adding to Britain's dollar deficit. Connally accused Lodge of being willing to destroy American foreign trade. Lodge replied he was asking only for a little common sense in the import program undertaken by ECA to enable western Europe to earn dollars.

Payments Plan Explained

The ECA Feb. 27 offered an official explanation of the proposed intra-European payments plan, for which it wants $600 million out of the total appropriation. In a memorandum to both House and Senate groups, the ECA explained: "Each country's deficits with some of its neighbors will be offset against its surpluses with others so that only a single net settlement between its central bank and the clearing house will be necessary." But when a member country has a creditor position by selling its neighbor more than it buys from that country, it would receive payment to cover this surplus only partly in gold or dollars. The balance would remain as a debt in European currencies owed to the creditor country by the payments union.

Barry Bingham, chief of the ECA mission to France, Feb. 27 told the Senate group he believed France would be on its own feet, freed from the need of special American assistance, by 1952. Robert M. Hanes, chief of the German ECA mission, was less optimistic about western Germany.

Ending its hearings for the second time, the Senate committee went into executive session to consider these major modifications of the measure:

1. An amendment by Chairman Connally which would have flatly barred any discrimination by Marshall plan countries against importation of U. S.

products, chiefly oil. By March 15, Connally had altered his amendment to say in effect "it is the sense of Congress that discrimination will not be tolerated." Connally's proposal was framed to meet complaints of U. S. oil companies who assert British restrictions on dollar-oil purchases violate the British - American ECA treaty. Connally said March 15 he had been informed by ECA officials, however, that the British "have modified their stand" on the American oil imports into the sterling area. He said he did not know the details.

2. An amendment by Sen Bourke B. Hickenlooper (R Iowa), that would knock out $600 million of the European aid funds for fiscal 1951. Connally opposed the change, saying Congress usually has authorized the full amounts required and made any reductions later when actual funds are provided.

3. An amendment by Sen. J. William Fulbright (D Ark.) to require recipient governments to devote 50 per cent of their "counterpart" funds to the removal of trade and payments restrictions within Europe. These local currency funds are deposited in amounts commensurate to that spent by ECA for recovery purposes.

Meanwhile, as the Committee studied its bill, the Joint Committee on Foreign Economic Cooperation—popularly known as the ECA "watchdog" committee—submitted a report warning Congress that Marshall Plan nations are shipping valuable materials to Russia. This, it pointed out, is in direct contradiction of American policy which bans such shipments. The report was written by the Committee's staff and was submitted to Congress without recommendations. Sen. Pat McCarran (D Nev.), chairman of the joint group, submitted a personal statement, saying the ECA objective of stabilizing our political allies in Europe would not be fully achieved by 1952.

"Point Four" Hearings

The Senate Foreign Relations Committee March 30 opened hearings on the Point Four phase of foreign aid. Secretary of State Acheson was the first witness, followed by Roving Ambassador Phillip Jessup, and Willard Thorp, Assistant Secretary of State, all presenting the Administration's case for the program. Numerous other witnesses from private or quasi-public groups appeared, some favoring and some opposing the plan. Hearings closed April 3.

The following day, the Committee voted 11-0 to approve the Point Four program as submitted by the Administration. The Committee action in approving the full $45 million requested took on added significance because the House had voted March 31 to trim this to $25 million. The Senate's intention to restore this cut was clearly indicated.

The legislation approved by the Senate group was in the form of an amendment, to be appended to the legislation dealing specifically with extension of the Marshall Plan. However, the Senate committee agreed to limit the authorization to technical aid. House provisions for government guarantees to private investment in underdeveloped countries were dropped

The Senate committee voted a five-year limit on the program while the House set no limit. Both bills specify that no single contract could run longer than three years. Both versions gave the President the option of working through the United Nations or private agencies. Both required the country benefiting to pay a fair share of the cost, to pass aid on in turn to other countries and to give the program full publicity. A House provision calling for collective bargaining in backward areas and the establishment of fair working standards was omitted by the Senate committee.

Bill Reported

The Senate Foreign Relations Committee reported S. 3101 on March 22. The measure authorized the full $2.95 billion in new cash for ECA that the agency had requested.

The Senate group's bill also authorized the ECA to spend the $150 million left over from appropriations the previous year.

The measure approved $100 million worth of economic aid to Korea beginning July 1, 1950, and authorized the President to spend some $100 million in unused funds previously appropriated for China-aid.

The Senate bill said that $50 million of this China-aid money — to be disbursed through June 30, 1951 — might be spent on the Chinese mainland or the islands of Formosa and Hainan "if the President deems it practical." The remainder would go in aid to the general area of China.

Like the House's measure, the Senate bill authorized the use of $600 million out of new ECA funds for a currency clearing house in Western Europe, to ease trade barriers and restrictions there. However, unlike the House, the Senate group did not make use of this sum mandatory for that particular purpose solely.

The Senate bill contained an amendment by William Fulbright (D Ark.) enabling the ECA to use counterpart funds in recipient countries to promote economic integration in Western Europe. It carried an amendment by Henry Cabot Lodge (R Mass.) instructing the ECA to lighten the load on the U. S. taxpayer by reducing its dollar purchases wherever possible.

The Senate bill also had a policy declaration authored by Tom Connally (D Tex.) that no recipient should discriminate against American business. Aimed at British pressures to restrict U. S. oil imports into British areas, the accepted amendment represented a revised version of one Connally had first offered, to penalize discriminators heavily.

Authority for the U. S. to continue its participation for another year in the International Children's Fund was granted.

Debate

The Senate took up its bill (S 3304) to continue all existing foreign economic aid programs on April 20, and Chairman Connally of the Foreign Relations Committee opened debate with a plea for bipartisan support for the bill. He told the Senate:

"There should be no partisan politics involved in our foreign relations. That field should not be invaded by demagogic appeals to gain personal popularity at home. That field should be a hallowed area in which world peace and the national interest of the United States and all its people are paramount and the sole concern of Americans who love their country."

Alexander Wiley (R Wis.), ranking Republican on the Foreign Relations Committee in the absence of Arthur H. Vandenberg (R Mich.), agreed with Connally and pointed out that "compared to the cost of the war, the cost of this peace program is small."

For the next several days, Senators recounted their earlier positions on the subject. Little progress was made on the pending legislation because other issues — crime investigations and the charges of Sen. Joseph McCarthy (R Wis.) that the State Department held subversives — kept cropping up to divert the Senate.

Spanish Aid

It was not until April 27 that the Senate took a vote on any feature of the legislation. When it did, it handed the Administration its first victory by defeating a proposal to bring Spain into the Marshall Plan, and authorize the Export-Import Bank to extend Spain a $50 million loan.

The amendment was offered by Pat McCarran (D Nev.), chairman of the Congressional "watchdog" group on foreign economic aid, and recently in Spain. He said that passing his amendment would add an ally to the U. S. anti-Communist camp. Owen Brewster (R Maine) supported the loan, saying it would help the U. S. to dispose of cotton surpluses, by enabling Spain to purchase this commodity.

Connally opposed inclusion of Spain in the ERP, stating the McCarran proposal would bring "an unwanted partner" into the Marshall Plan and would prove "offensive" to participating countries. Sen. A. Willis Robertson (D Va.) said inclusion of Spain would do violence to the entire concept of the Marshall project, and Hubert Humphrey (D Minn.) flayed Franco as a "symbol of dictatorship."

The McCarran amendment was then defeated on a 35-42 roll-call vote April 27. The voting line-up was 28 Democrats and 14 Republicans opposed; 14 Democrats and 21 Republicans favoring. (For background on the Spanish question as it arose repeatedly during 1949 in connection with Congressional action on foreign aid, see CQ Almanac, Vol. V, Page 380).

Cuts Offered

When the Senate approached the sections of the ERP-extension measure dealing with money, a number of amendments and opinions were set forth.

James P. Kem (R Mo.) offered an amendment calling for a $1-billion slash in the bill. He asked the Senate: "Do the results of the Marshall Plan justify such a lavish outpouring of dollars of the American people to Europe, at a time when bankruptcy is not far around the corner here at home — and when we have so many needs of our own people awaiting— and demanding — attention?"

Hickenlooper proposed a $600-million cut saying, "We've just got to stop spending more than we take in."

Robert A. Taft (R Ohio) said he was sure the ERP could be cut, but said the estimated needs were so vague he didn't know whether the cut should be half a billion or a billion and a half.

Voting then started on the various amendments to trim funds.

Administration supporters beat down two attempts to cut the bill by $1 billion and $500 million before they bowed to an amendment slicing $250 million from new Marshall Plan money. Kem, asking for the $1-billion cut, was voted down 17-62 on roll call. Then Taft tried for $500 million. He lost out on a tie, 40-40 (proffered amendments automatically are rejected on tie votes). Then Styles Bridges (R N.H.) gained approval of his $250-million reduction 47-33.

With money moves disposed of, the Senate went ahead on other provisions of the legislation, which went through substantially as reported by the committee. A series of amendments designed to bar aid to countries nationalizing industries, discriminating against U. S. businessmen, selling military goods behind the iron curtain, controlling currency, etc., were defeated.

Point Four Debated

The controversial Committee move designed to attach the Point Four program to the legislation was then brought up. Opposition to inclusion of this program in the pending measure was led by Eugene Millikin (R Colo.). He said a bi-partisan commission should make a more thorough study of the plan. The gist of his arguments, and those of his supporters, was that the language of the program was too sweeping and gave him the impression that Point Four was somewhat hastily thought out. He urged further consideration of such a ramified undertaking.

Taft also opposed the Point Four proposal and strongly urged the Senate not to vote another international program. Taft said the program "is opening a new field for spreading government money around the world." Sen. Kenneth McKellar (D Tenn.), chairman of the Appropriations Committee and also an opponent of Point Four said: "We're going mad, we're going wild."

Sens. Brien McMahon (D Conn.) and Humphrey led the Administration's fight for adoption of the Point Four program with support from several members of the Foreign Relations Committee. McMahon said Millikin's idea of postponing inauguration of Point Four for a year so that it could be studied further called for more time than was available. Said McMahon: "This project will not wait that long." Events for which the program was drawn were "marching faster" than Millikin and his bloc "apparently realize."

Humphrey repeatedly underscored his belief that Point Four "is a help program of self-help" for economically underdeveloped peoples. He rebutted Taft's assertion that the program would be a give-away plan. "It should be made crystal clear that this program is limited specifically to an outstanding surplus this Nation has," said Humphrey, reciting America's ability to export "know-how".

Point Four Upheld

The question then came on the Millikin amendment which would have deferred enactment of a Point Four program pending further study. The amendment was rejected 33-41 on a roll-call vote May 5. The Committee amendment attaching the program to the legislation was then approved, 37-36.

By this time, it was 8 o'clock the evening of May 5. The Senate stayed in session, however, and within an hour voted 60-8 to approve the multi-titled legislation. After this ballot, the Senate struck its own number from the bill and put the House number— HR 7797 — on the measure. This cleared the way for it to be sent to conference, where the differing House and Senate versions could be reconciled.

CONFERENCE

The legislation was sent to conference May 9. Conferees were Sens. Tom Connally, (D Tex.) Walter F. George (D Ga.), Elbert Thomas (D Utah), Alexander Wiley (R Wis.), and H. Alexander Smith (R N.J.) and Reps. John Kee (D W. Va.), James P. Richards (D S.C.), Thomas S. Gordon (D Ill.), John M. Vorys (R Ohio) and Frances Bolton (R Ohio).

There were three major differences between the House and Senate versions. The House had stipulated that the $600 million earmarked for a European Payments Union under the ERP be used for no other purpose. The Senate, which had omitted this mandatory feature, accepted the House view in conference.

The House had urged that the investment guaranty system under ERP also protect investors against seizure occasioned by war or revolution. The Senate version had not been as broad, and in conference, the Senate trimmed the House approach. Guaranties were extended to protect investors against expropriation or confiscation only, without spelling these out.

The third major difference was over the Point Four program. The House had authorized $25 million to launch it. The Senate authorized the full $45 million requested. The conference split the difference, approving $35 million.

Truman's Message

While the conferees were working on their compromise, Connally and Kee received telegrams from President Truman, then on his sweep through the Northwest. On May 11, Truman urged the conferees to obtain "prompt passage" of the legislation in order to "strengthen Secretary Acheson's hand at his important meeting in London."

Truman called for the full $45 million asked for Point Four. Said the President: "Reduction of the amount would not only hamper effective work in this field, but would also have serious political and psychological reactions" in countries and areas affected.

On May 15, the conference committee reported its compromise version to Congress. Sums authorized in the final bill were (in millions):

Marshall Plan		$2,850
China area	about	100*
Korea		100
Arab refugees		27.45
Point Four		35
Children's fund		15
Total		$3,127.45

*China aid is from an unused fund previously appropriated. It was estimated to total from $94 million to $100 million. The final bill authorized its distribution as follows:

$40 million for non - Communist forces in China and Formosa; $40 million for the general area adjacent to China; $8 million for famine relief inside Red China; $6 million for Chinese students in the United States.

The $15 million for the International Children's Emergency Fund is unused money previously appropriated.

The conference report, however, encountered some opposition in both the House and the Senate, although its adoption was never in serious doubt.

House Approval

The House approved the measure May 23 after brief debate. Vote was 248-88 on roll call.

A majority of the House Republicans opposed the bill on final vote. Line-up was: 185 Democrats, 63 Republicans for extension; 13 Democrats, 74 Republicans and one American Laborite opposed. Robert F. Rich (R Pa.) led the opposition, asking "Where are you going to get the $3 billion?"

The Senate debated three days before accepting the bill May 25 on a 47-27 roll-call vote Both votes were party - line.

Senate Action

In the Senate opposition stemmed from provisions authorizing $35 million for the Point Four program of aid to underdeveloped areas abroad. Republican critics said the bill contained wording not previously voted on by the Senate.

Forrest Donnell (R Mo.) said the new language promised government guarantees against losses to American businessmen trading abroad. Connally, chairman of the Foreign Relations Committee, insisted the language was not a guarantee and added that the House would not accept the bill if the provision was not retained. Leverett Saltonstall (R Mass.) said the clause in question merely authorized the government to make agreements with other countries to protect investors. Donnell replied: "I should like to be recorded as being opposed to the use of language which holds out in glittering generalities some assurance to persons to whom we did not intend to give assurance."

George W. Malone (R Nev.) said he opposed the entire bill. He told the Senate, "If we are still in a cold war with Russia, including eastern Europe, then let us cease immediately all shipments and all assistance to the nations of the world that are helping Russia and her satellite countries equip for a third world war."

Robert A. Taft (R Ohio) criticized the Point Four program because, he said, it would launch an entirely new world - wide spending program. He said, "This program differs from the ECA program in that it no longer has an anti-Communist connotation or a connotation of a program by which we are aiding countries which are supposed to be fighting communism; but this program is wide open to the entire world, including the Communist countries."

Kenneth S. Wherry (R Neb.), said the Point Four program was "more fantastic than anything the Fair Deal has yet proposed to this Congress." William Knowland (R Calif.) said the measure should be approved, as Congress could still "control the situation through control of the purse strings."

Final vote followed party lines with 38 Democrats and nine Republicans approving the bill and 27 Republicans and four Democrats voting against it.

LAW ENACTED

President Truman signed the legislation on June 5, and called it "a memorable step forward in our program for peace." He traced the backgrounds of the five programs carried in the measure, and asserted that continuing them "will give impetus to increasing cooperation" among participating countries. The legislation would "add greatly to their collective strength and will bring closer the day when they can contribute on a self-sustaining basis to the economic growth of all free nations."

Truman said he was "especially glad" about the portion of the legislation continuing aid to Arab refugees in Palestine. Drawn up with "the economic potential of the Near East in mind", the program aims at "successful development in this area (which) will make an obvious contribution to the maintenance of peace."

"The major new step" in the legislation was the launching of the Point Four plan, Truman said. He outlined again the objectives of the program, and points carried in the bill to help meet them. The President said aid to "the millions of people who live in under-developed areas" would "make a tremendous contribution to the strength of freedom and the defeat of Communist imperialism."

Saying that he looked forward "to expanded business investment in those areas which will be made possible as their economic systems grow in strength and stability," Truman declared "I hope the Congress will soon enact the companion measure to this act, which will encourage and support such business investment."

Truman concluded his statement by expressing the hope the Congress would not stint itself when it came to appropriating the money authorized in the legislation he signed into law.

LOBBY STANDS

As in 1949 when the Marshall Plan was extended for a second year, there were scores of organizations registering their positions on legislation extending it for a third year. In 1950, however, the extension legislation also included the measure inaugurating the President's so - called "Point Four" program to aid underdeveloped areas of the world.

It was the Point Four section of the legislation which drew most of the lobbying. The following are organizations, and typical quotes from them, which generally favored the program.

In addition to the following, scores of organizations passed resolutions favoring not only Point Four but also ERP-extension. However, the organizations have not been listed below unless they formally sent their expressions to the Congress. Individuals testifying before Congressional committees on their own behalf, and non-national organizations, have been excluded. The following are national groupings.

Typical Views on Technical Aid

United Auto Workers (CIO) recommended that Point Four legislation contain guarantees that labor would be free to bargain collectively in countries receiving technical aid under its provisions.

Speaking for the CIO, Donald Montgomery said, "Free labor, trained and equipped to bargain collectively with management and to settle grievances, is a basic requirement for the strengthening of democracy in these countries."

Federal Council of Churches of Christ spokesman Dr. Walter van Kirk said the aid program should be undertaken in cooperation with the United Nations. He did not think "friends can be bought" with a unilateral program.

American Friends Service Committee said it would be "fatal" to use foreign aid "to further political ideologies and not primarily because of our interest in helping underdeveloped people"

National Foreign Trade Council opposed federal guarantees of foreign investment and favors bilateral treaty protection instead.

Chamber of Commerce of the U. S. said aid should be restricted to nations agreeing to fair treatment of American capital. If additional safeguards were needed, the law should precisely define powers of guaranty agency, said C. of C., and limit total obligations and cover "existing investments when essential to avoid harmful discrimination".

National Farmers Union suggested guarantees be in form of subsidies by U.S. and recipient government to American firms, and related to purchase by U.S. government of strategic and critical materials.

National Council for Prevention of War — Endorsed Point Four on condition that overseas investments be given no greater security guarantees than are given U.S. domestic investments. A further condition was that the technical systems be "non-imperialistic, and that the welfare of the people in the countries affected be a prime consideration."

Foreign Policy Association published a report saying progress of the Soviet Union's industrial expansion program in the Uzbek, Turkmen, Tadzhik and Kirgiz Republics demonstrated that Point Four need not cost "formidable amounts" of money. Warren Wilhelm former government economist now associated with Harvard University's Russian Research Center, authored the report.

National Grange listed five objectives "we as a nation" seek in Point Four. "I have not listed humanitarian aims as one of our motives," said J. T. Sanders.

A National Economic Council spokesman said Point Four is "the scheme whereby more billions of tax money will be wrung from you taxpayers . . . It's an extension of Henry Wallace's plan to give a quart of milk every day to every Hottentot . . . just one more part of the socialist-communist scheme to take away what's left of the savings of the American people . . ."

Others Taking Stands

In addition, these organizations expressed themselves directly to Congress on the legislation. All favored it, but some asked changes. Main one requested was that Point Four aid go via the U.N.

Alien Sheepherders

S 1165—P. L. 587

SUMMARY

P. L. 587 permitted the granting of special quota immigration visas to a maximum of 250 alien sheepherders until June 30, 1951. As S 1165 it was introduced in the Senate by Sen. Pat McCarran (D Nev.) March 2, 1949, and was passed by voice vote June 8, 1950. The bill was adopted by voice vote by the House June 20, 1950. It was signed by President Truman June 30, 1950.

Provisions

P. L. 587 provides that:

1. Special quota immigration visas are authorized for a maximum of 250 skilled sheepherders when these persons cannot be admitted into this country under the normal quotas assigned by law to the countries in which they reside.

2. No sheepherder may be admitted to the U. S. who has not been offered a permanent position by a sheep ranch owner.

3. Sheepherders admitted under P. L. 587 must be able to qualify for permanent residence in the U. S. on the same basis as immigrants coming in under the normal immigration quotas.

4. The number of sheepherders admitted to the U. S. under this act will be subtracted from the normal immigration quotas of the countries in which the sheepherders formerly lived.

5. The normal immigration quotas of these countries not be reduced by more than 50 per cent in any fiscal year because of P. L. 587.

6. P. L. 587 is to remain effective until June 30, 1951.

BACKGROUND

S 1165 had a long and bumpy history before it was finally enacted into law June 30, 1950. The measure was entered on the Senate's consent calendar (see Glossary) when introduced, but it was objected to every time it was called up between June 27, 1949, and June 8, 1950. (June 27, 1949, was the date the bill was reported to the Senate by the Senate Judiciary Committee, of which McCarran was chairman. June 8, 1950, was the date the measure was finally considered by the upper chamber.)

Among the reasons consideration of S 1165 was blocked in the Senate for almost a full year were McCarran's views on P. L. 555, the Displaced Persons bill. (See story on P. L. 555 on p. 225). McCarran opposed portions of this bill and resisted its passage for many months. Senators who supported it retaliated by objecting to the alien sheepherders measure, which they called "McCarran's private DP bill." No one objected to consideration of S 1165 on June 8, 1950, after the measure liberalizing DP legislation had been unblocked by McCarran and sent to conference.

Justice Dept. Noncommittal

While objections were voiced to consideration of S 1165 in 1949, the Department of Justice analyzed it. In reply to a query by McCarran, Peyton Ford, assistant to the Attorney General, said that the Department was, in general, opposed to the principle of obligating future immigration quotas, and also opposed to the enactment of special legislation for the benefit of a single industry or occupation. In view of the serious situation in the sheep-raising industry, however, Ford said that the Department was not opposed to the enactment of the bill in question, though it preferred to make no recommendation one way or the other.

SENATE

When the Senate, June 8, 1950, finally took up S 1165, McCarran declared that the measure was essential to the future of the country's sheep ranch owners. He said that few Americans were willing to learn the trade of sheepherding and that, because of the scarcity of men capable of taking care of sheep, wool production in the U. S. had been dwindling at an alarming rate.

McCarran said that S 1165 was designed primarily to bring sheepherders from the Basque area in Spain and certain regions of France. He added that a number of sheepherders had migrated to the U. S. in years past and that almost all of them had become useful and law-abiding citizens. There was no contradiction voiced.

The Senate approved S 1165 on June 8 by voice vote.

HOUSE

The House Judiciary Committee reported S 1165 to the lower chamber June 15, 1950. The measure was adopted by the House by voice vote June 20. There was no debate.

This measure, which became Private Law 1031, granted 152 Basque sheepherders permanent residence. These aliens were admitted to this country under temporary permits between 1943 and 1949. The measure was adopted without objection by the Senate Aug. 23 and without objection by the House Sept. 19. It was signed into law by the President Sept. 28. The measure was introduced by Sen. Pat McCarran (D Nev.)

Iranian Students

SUMMARY

Congress completed action in 1950 on a bill which enabled the U.S. to make good on a 25-year-old promise to the government of Iran. When the President signed HR 5731 into Public Law 861 on Sept. 29, $110,000 which had been held in the Treasury since 1925 became available for education of Iranian students in the U. S.

BACKGROUND

Existence of the fund grew out of an "international incident" at Tehran, capital of Persia (now Iran) in 1924, when Major Robert W. Imbrie, U.S. vice consul, was murdered and another American injured by a mob.

The U.S. demanded full satisfaction, including payment of indemnities, and transportation of Major Imbrie's body to the U.S. for burial. The Persian government paid the indemnities to the injured American and to Major Imbrie's widow, and stated in a note to the U.S. that it "would ship the remains of the deceased consul to America aboard a Persian man-of-war if Persia possessed one. But inasmuch as it is unable to do so, it agrees to pay the expenses which may be incurred by the dispatch of an American man-of-war to receive the remains."

The cost was estimated at $110,000, and the U.S., in its turn, offered to set aside this money as a special trust fund "for the education of Persian students at institutions of higher learning in the United States."

The trust fund was not established under existing authority (as opponents of this bill contended it could have been). Twice in 1925 and 1926, President Coolidge asked for legislative authority to use the money for the promised purpose. On both occasions Congress failed to clear the legislation. When the State Department sought to use the money for education of Iranian students in 1948, the Comptroller General ruled that it could not be done without legislative authority.

HOUSE

HR 5731 was introduced by Rep. A. S. J. Carnahan (D Mo.) July 22, 1949. The House Foreign Affairs Committee considered it in executive session July 25, and reported it to the House unanimously Aug. 1. The bill passed the House by unanimous consent Aug. 15, 1949.

SENATE

The Senate Foreign Relations Committee reported the bill unanimously Oct. 11, 1949, but there was no further action during the first session. Joseph C. O'Mahoney (D Wyo.) repeatedly objected to consideration of the bill on call of the calendar, and was the chief opponent when it came up for debate Sept. 19, 1950. J. William Fulbright (D Ark.) was principal proponent of the measure.

O'Mahoney held that the simple exchange of notes did not constitute a real obligation on the part of the U.S. He charged that the Persian government had failed to carry out its promise to punish the murderer or murderers, and cited various sources charging that the whole riot was staged by Bolshevik agents.

On the other hand, Fulbright said, "If we followed the rule of an eye for an eye or a tooth for a tooth, we would never make any progress."

FINAL ACTION

O'Mahoney's motion to recommit the bill was rejected on a division vote, and the bill passed the Senate without amendment Sept. 19. The President signed it Sept. 29.

Military Aid Program

SUMMARY

On June 1, the President sent Congress a special message urging continuation of the Mutual Defense Assistance Act instituted in 1949 to grant arms aid to nations resisting communism. The President's request was for extension of this program for a second year, through June 30, 1951. A total authorization for the second year of $1,222,500,000 was requested.

Recipients, and the amounts requested for them, were: North Atlantic Treaty signatories, $1 billion; Greece, Turkey, and Iran, $131.5 million; the "general area" of China, $75 million; and the South Korean and Philippine Republics, $16,000,000.

The Senate Foreign Relations and Armed Services Committees heard numerous government officials from the State and Defense departments urge support of the measure. An urgent plea for continued aid to Korea was put before the groups by the U. S. Ambassador to that country. The Committees unanimously approved the Administration's request. No figures were changed.

The Senate began to debate the bill only 72 hours before the Republic of Korea was attacked by North Korean Communist forces. What had been a relatively intermittent debate on U. S. foreign policy in general became an intensely-conducted discussion of the Korean situation.

Senators pressed hard for prompt, decisive action on the arms aid bill, and on June 30, an overwhelming vote of 66-0 passed the legislation. Senators who had previously announced they would seek major changes in the bill dropped their plans in a display of unanimity over the pending measure. Even those Senators who were unable actually to ballot announced themselves as favoring the measure.

The House Foreign Affairs Committee had been holding hearings on the legislation, and had taken testimony from the same witnesses who appeared before the combined Senate groups. The House body had intended submitting its own version of arms aid, but after the Korean invasion, it abandoned this idea. In the interests of speed, the Committee voted 24-0 on July 11 to accept the Senate-passed bill. Not a word was changed.

The House itself voted 362-1 to approve the measure on July 19. There was only relatively little debate, none of it directly opposing continuation of the arms aid program.

The bill was sped to the White House, where President Truman signed it into law on July 26.

Provisions

(Most of the provisions in the 1949 law were carried over. See CQ Almanac, VOL. V, page 357. The following provisions represent either changes in a few of the 1949 stipulations, or additions to them.)

The 12 nations signatory to the North Atlantic Treaty (U.S., Britain, France, Italy, Belgium, Denmark, Luxembourg, the Netherlands, Iceland, Portugal, Norway, and Canada) to receive $1 billion authorized to be appropriated through June 30, 1951.

A total of $131.5 million was authorized for arms aid over the same period to Greece, Turkey, and Iran.

A total of $75 million was authorized to be granted for the "general area" of China. Out of this money, the President was required to account publicly in the regular federal bookkeeping fashion for $40 million. He was required to account for $27,500,000 of the remainder to the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, the House Foreign Affairs Committee, and the Armed Services Committees of both Senate and House. The President would not have to account for the $7,500,000 balance.

For the Republics of Korea and the Philippines, a total of $16 million was authorized to be appropriated.

A total of $214,000,000 remaining on hand out of funds appropriated in 1949 for the first year of the arms aid program was authorized to be carried over for expenditure through June 30, 1951.

An additional $250,000,000 worth of excess and surplus war supplies and material was authorized to be transferred to recipient nations.

Nations wishing to buy equipment and arms were permitted to draw upon credits up to $100,000,000 established for the purpose by the 1950 extension act. Contracts under which nations could draw on these credits were stipulated.

The President was authorized to transfer up to ten per cent of the total funds or contract authorizations to any individual recipient. This boosted the percentage from the five per cent authorized in the 1949 law. In addition, the President was permitted to transfer such funds "to any other European nation" apart from signatories to the North Atlantic Treaty.

Termination of the arms aid program was stipulated if any country failed to make "its full contribution" to defense plans "of the area of which it is a part."

Methods of computing the cost and value of excess equipment to be shipped countries were spelled out in greater detail. Provisions governing such transfers were stipulated.

Terminology involving "production equipment" subject to transfer was clarified.

Votes

The Senate approved S. 3809 by a unanimous ballot of 66-0 on June 30.

The House approved the same bill 362-1 on July 19.

The measure was sent to the White House at once. It was the first major foreign policy legislation since the end of World War II that did not require a trip to a conference committee for reconciliation of differing House and Senate views.

BACKGROUND

The 81st Congress at its first session inaugurated the "Mutual Defense Assistance Act" to implement the North Atlantic Treaty. For the first year of the arms aid program launched by the Act, a total of $1,314,010,000 was authorized to be granted for military assistance to Treaty signatories, plus Iran, Greece, Turkey, Korea, the Philippines, and the "general area" of China.

Military assistance was construed by the law to mean the transfer of equipment, materials, and services to recipient nations. The funds authorized were mainly to reimburse U.S. agencies for the cost of stocks transferred from them to the assisted countries.

The bill also carried broad policy declarations, detailed prescriptions for the administration of the program, and conditions for its conduct and termination.

Legislation launching the first year of the program passed the Senate by a vote of 55 to 24. The House ballot was 238 to 122. (See CQ Almanac, Vol. V, page 351.)

Party Stands

Democrats: Their 1948 platform stressed the desirability of "establishing measures for peace and the prevention of aggression and the threat of another war . . . we pledge continued support of regional arrangements within the United Nations Charter, such as the Inter-American Regional Pact . . ."

Republicans: "Our common defense must be strengthened and unified . . . We particularly commend the value of regional arrangements as prescribed by the (U.N.) Charter; and we cite the Western Hemispheric Defense Pact as a useful model."

SENATE

Hearings

On June 2, the day after the President's request for the arms aid program's renewal was received in Congress, the Senate's Foreign Relations and Armed Services Committees met in joint session to hear the first witness, Secretary of State Dean Acheson.

Acheson urged extension of the program, saying, "If any of us let down or slacken our efforts, the result could well be disaster. Only by forceful, concerted action along the lines which have been initiated can the countries which practice democracy preserve democracy."

Secretary of Defense Louis Johnson testified June 5. He told Congressmen that continuance of the aid program was necessary to block Russian expansionist aims.

Johnson said Western military strength must be built up to approach Russian power. He said, "Potential strength is not enough. To meet the speed of modern attack there must also be strength in being. European forces must be increased to meet the existing threat of aggression." He asked that authority be voted which would allow the U.S. to furnish pact nations with arms production equipment and with spare parts for equipment previously obtained. He also asked that they not be required to pay for arms in advance.

Omar Bradley, chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, backed the bill June 6. He told the Committees: "A year ago the successful defense of Western Europe, in the face of coordinated enemy attack, was a remote possibility. The military estimates were discouraging. But it now appears possible that these European nations with the help the United States had given them, and the strength derived from our collective security planning, will—if given time—be able to defend and hold Western Europe, if our present rate of progress continues . . ."

W. Averell Harriman, United States Special Representative in Europe, reported on progress made by North Atlantic Pact nations and asked approval of the extension proposal.

On June 9, appeals from six American Ambassadors for approval of the arms program were placed before the joint Committees.

The statements were sent by Lewis W. Douglas, Ambassador to the United Kingdom; Henry F. Grady, Ambassador to Greece and Ambassador-designate to Iran; George Wadsworth, Ambassador to Turkey; John C. Wiley, present Ambassador to Iran; John J. Muccio, Ambassador to the Republic of Korea; and Myron C. Cowen, Ambassador to the Philippines.

Ambassador Douglas warned that an abandonment of the military aid program at this time would be "fatal" to western Europe. He said the gains expected from continuation would be "far greater than the mere mathematical proportions would indicate."

Korea Cited

In his statement about Korea, Muccio said "the uniquely compelling urgency which attaches to the military assistance requirements of the Republic has been brought about by virtue of the presence on its very frontiers (and not more than 30 miles from the capital city of Seoul) of an aggressive, Soviet-dominated Communist regime which is publicly committed to the destruction of the Republic, by force of arms if necessary."

Said Muccio: "The Korean Government has exhibited a willingness and ability to utilize this aid effectively. Internally, the government is achieving increasingly favorable results in the vigorous campaign now being waged against Communist guerrillas.

"The fact that armed guerrilla strength has been reduced from an estimated peak of 2,000 to 577 men from September 1949 to April 1950, and that more than 5,000 guerrillas have been killed during that same period, may be taken as a measure of the success of army and police operations.

"Although the threat of North Korean aggression seems, temporarily at least, to have been successfully contained, the undeniable material superiority of the North Korean forces would provide North Korea with the margin of victory in the event of a full-scale invasion of the Republic.

"Such superiority is particularly evident in the matter of heavy infantry support weapons, tanks, and combat aircraft with which the U.S.S.R. has supplied and continues to supply its Korean puppet."

While hearings continued, Sen. Henry Cabot Lodge (R Mass.) proposed that $100 million worth of counterpart funds held by Marshall Plan countries be diverted to the arms aid program to help finance it in recipient nations.

On June 15, Hoffman made a last-minute appearance before the combined Senate Committees to oppose the Lodge move. Hoffman said such a diversion would seriously hurt the ERP, and would tend to support Russian propaganda that the economic aid program was a war plan from its inception.

The Senate concluded its hearings the following day.

Committee

After two days of executive session to polish their measure, the two Senate Committees voted 12-0 on June 19 to approve the legislation. No amendments were attached. Lodge's proposal was turned down "by a strong vote" according to Foreign Relations Chairman Tom Connally (D Tex.), who said Senators did not want to "scramble up the Marshall Plan and the arms plan."

Lodge, however, said he would resubmit his proposal in the form of an amendment when the bill was debated. Another amendment was threatened when Harry Cain (R Wash.) told the Senate June 20 he had only voted "Present" as a member of the Armed Services group when it approved S 3809. He explained he wanted complete freedom to criticize the bill's omission of Spain from the list of recipients. Sen. William F. Knowland (R Calif.) announced he was considering amendments to limit the arms aid program to seven instead of 12 months, so that Congress might see whether other nations seat Red China in the United Nations before granting the countries aid.

The bill was actually reported June 21. The $1,222,500,000 requested by the Administration was authorized intact. In their accompanying report, the two Committees noted that the progress made since the arms aid plan was instituted in 1949 "has been unexpectedly good."

Debate

Debate on S 3809 opened June 23, only 48 hours before the invasion of South Korea by North Korean Communists. The assault galvanized the Senate. Most Senators made speeches on the Korean situation, technically delivering them as part of their discussion of the pending arms aid legislation.

Partially because the bill carried authorizations of $16 million for hard-pressed Korea, and the Philippine Republic, Administration leaders called for an immediate vote on the measure. Republican leaders held back somewhat, but then agreed to vote June 30.

One of the effects of the Korean invasion on Senate consideration of the arms aid program was that several Senators who had planned to push amendments decided to drop their plans. Principal ones abandoned were by Lodge, calling for a diversion of Marshall Plan funds for arms equipment, and by Cain, seeking Spain's inclusion in the program.

Cain, however, offered a second amendment, to leave the money authorization for Korea blank so that the Senate Appropriations group could fill it in later after study of the Korean situation.

It was pointed out in debate that Korea could receive "upwards of $100 million" if the President were to exercise provisions in the bill permitting him to transfer money from European defense funds to the Korean fund, or any other nation's. Up to ten per cent of the total money in the bill could be so transferred. The Cain amendment was defeated on a voice vote.

Another amendment was offered by Allen J. Ellender (D. La.), permitting the President to cut off aid to any country "not making its full contribution" to defense projects in its area. The amendment was accepted by a voice vote.

Still a third amendment came from Sen. Robert A. Taft (R Ohio), GOP leader who opposed the arms aid program in 1949, but spoke in favor of it this year. On June 29, the Senate accepted by voice vote a change Taft had suggested in the bill's wording about cost-figuring on surplus arms sold countries. The amendment was especially concerned with shipment of cheap arms to South American countries. Such shipment was implicitly banned under effect of the Taft motion.

Final Action

Winding up debate, the Senate voted unanimously to approve the bill. The final vote was 66-0, with 32 Republicans joining 34 Democrats on the ballot. Twenty-four absent Senators of both parties declared themselves in favor of the bill.

HOUSE

Hearings, Committee

The Administration's arms aid program was submitted to the House Foreign Affairs Committee on June 5, and the group opened public hearings at once. The same witnesses who had gone before the Senate Committees also appeared before the House unit, more or less repeating the same arguments. Among the witnesses were the Secretaries of State and Defense, the Chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, and various State Dept. and ECA officials. The same Ambassadors who had put statements on the arms aid program before the Senate did likewise for the lower chamber.

In addition to those men who had testified before the Senate groups, the House Committee on June 7 heard General of the Army George C. Marshall, former Secretary of State and Army Chief of Staff. Marshall said the U.S. should take positive steps to defend the West, by passing the legislation. He conceded there was a hazard in building up anti-Russian strength, but added, "I am convinced that to sit impotent is the most dangerous thing we can do."

On June 26, the Committee heard the only witness opposing extension of the arms aid program. He was Frederick J. Libby, executive secretary of the National Council for the Prevention of War.

Four days later, the Senate passed its own version of an arms aid program. Instead of submitting its own legislation, the House Committee decided to endorse the upper chamber's measure. This it did by a unanimous 24-0 vote on July 11. Not a word was changed in the Senate's bill.

Debate, Final Action

The House entered into general debate on the bill July 18. No amendments were offered. Unanimity prevailed in the House, and the measure drew no serious objection. A final vote was secured July 19, and the bill passed on a thumping 362-1 ballot. (Vote page 262.)

House passage of the bill, with the Senate's wording left intact, sent the measure to the President for signing into law.

It was the first time since the war's end a major foreign aid bill was not required to go to conference for ironing out of different House and Senate opinions about it. Prompt Congressional action on the measure—which cleared in the full scope requested originally by the Administration—reflected Capitol concern with the Korean situation.

The single vote against the bill came from Rep. Vito Marcantonio (ALP N.Y.). Rep. Robert Rich (R Pa.) voted "Present" when his name was called.

The two days of debate found Democrats and Republicans alike favoring the bill, but utilizing its consideration as a reason for numerous speeches on U.S. foreign policy.

Said Rep. Walter Judd (R Minn.), long-time advocate of armed aid to Far Eastern nations: "Our chickens have come home to roost." John Vorys (R Ohio), member of the House Foreign Affairs group, said the U.S. was embroiled in the Korean tragedy because the State Dept. had followed "the Lattimore line"—a reference to Owen J. Lattimore, described by his attackers as architect of U.S. policy in the Orient.

Rep. Clare Hoffman (R Mich.) said the present situation resulted from U.S. "meddling in other peoples' affairs" and that money should more properly be devoted to U.S. defenses. Rep. Charles A. Halleck (R Ind.) said he supported the arms aid bill, but that in foreign policy, Republicans were "only called in when the whistle blows for what may be a crash landing." He urged greater bipartisan conduct of foreign affairs.

Among Democrats, Foreign Affairs Chairman John Kee (D W.Va.) urged approval of the bill because the "need is urgent at this time." Rep. Edward H. Kruse (D Ind.) said he not only favored the bill but "would have a strong tendency to go along" with suggestions the atomic bomb be dropped on North Korea.

LAW ENACTED

President Truman signed S 3809 into law on July 26. In a statement, he called the arms aid program a signal warning to "those bent on aggression." Mr. Truman called continuation of the program a step toward the achievement of "our goal . . . to create the kind of strength which will deter potential aggressors from attacking so formidable and united groups; and to defeat aggression, should it come."

Korean-Formosan Aid

SUMMARY

A $60 million program of economic aid to the Republic of Korea cleared Congress Feb. 10, 1950, with a provision enabling the President to aid certain areas of China as well, out of $103 million remaining from money previously appropriated for this purpose. Funds for Korea and non-Communist parts of China were to remain available for Presidential spending through June 30, 1950. In addition, the President was authorized to lend ten small merchant ships to Korea for commercial use in east Asian waters only.

The Korean-aid portion of the legislation had tough going through the Congress. In 1949, the Senate approved a bill (S 2319) authorizing a $150 million "Little ECA" for Korea. (See CQ Almanac, Vol. V, pp. 382-4) The House took no action until Jan. 1950, when it turned to a companion bill (HR 5330). The House then cut the Administration-requested figure of $150 million to $60 million. It defeated a move to recommit the bill. But, hours later, the House reversed itself, and voted to reject the measure outright. Defeat for HR 5330 came Jan. 19, 1950, on a close 191-192 ballot.

Administration forces in and out of Congress sought reconsideration of the action. On Jan. 20, the original Senate measure was submitted to the House Foreign Affairs Committee. This group studied the bill amid widespread concern over the succession of military defeats suffered by the Chinese Nationalists, whom the Communists had forced to establish headquarters on the island of Formosa off the China coast. Pressures were strong in Congress to let the President aid Formosa out of unspent funds set aside for Chinese assistance in the past. About $103 million were involved.

The Foreign Affairs body then changed the original Senate bill (S 2319) by substituting provisions permitting the President to help Formosa with China-aid money on hand, but authorizing $60 million for Korean aid instead of the $150 million approved by the Senate.

The House passed S 2319, as amended, on Feb. 9, 1950. The Senate agreed to the House change the following day. The measure was sent to the White House and signed into law by the President on February 14, 1950.

Provisions

The Far Eastern Economic Assistance Act of 1950:

Authorized $60 million to be granted the President "to furnish assistance to the Republic of Korea", the money to remain available through June 30, 1950. The Reconstruction Finance Corporation was authorized to advance $30 million until regular appropriations for the Act were granted.

Approved the loan of up to ten merchant vessels, each not to exceed 2,500 gross tons, to Korea, to be returned to the United States by June 30, 1951, or earlier if requested. Title of the ships was retained by the U. S. The Act stated that "such vessels shall be operated only in east Asian waters."

Stipulated that aid to Korea would cease at once if Korea formed a coalition government including "one or more members of the Communist Party or of the party now in control of the government of northern Korea."

Extended to June 30, 1950, the time in which the President could spend money already on hand for "assistance in certain areas of China." This was the so-called "Formosan amendment", which made it possible for the President to keep help going to the anti-Communist Nationalist government on Formosa. The money remaining from 1949 grants to ECA for China aid would have become unexpendable on Feb. 15, 1950, if the Formosan amendment had been rejected.

Votes

House defeated HR 5330, 191-192, Jan. 19, 1950. (See vote, page 260.)
House passed S 2319, 240-134, Feb. 9, 1950. (See vote, page 260.)
Senate passed S 2319, concurring in House amendment, by voice vote, Feb. 10, 1950.

BACKGROUND

Five days before the end of the first session of the 81st Congress in 1949, the Senate passed, 48-13, an aid-to-Korea bill which had been pending for several months. In response to requests by President Truman, the measure authorized $150 million for economic aid to Korea, and the loan of ten small merchant ships to the new state. The money was to have remained available through fiscal 1950.

A companion measure sent to the House Foreign Affairs Committee was reported to the lower chamber in July, 1949. However, the House failed to act either upon its companion bill or on the Senate-approved version. The $150 million "Little ECA" program for Korea was still hanging fire when Congress adjourned.

Accordingly, the only funds sent Korea during calendar 1949 were those authorized outside the framework of an independent aid program for the new Republic.
For military aid, Korea was included in the Mutual Defense Assistance Act of 1949. (For all details of 1949 Korean aid, see CQ Almanac, Vol. V, pp. 240, 244, 351, 382-4.)

Debate

The House took up its committee-approved version (HR 5330) on Jan. 19, 1950. Speaking for aid to "the toehold the free world has in Northeast Asia," were Charles A. Eaton (R N. J.), Frances P. Bolton (R Ohio), Jacob K. Javits (R N. Y.), William Lemke (R N. D.), Harley O. Staggers (D W. Va.), Helen Gahagan Douglas (D Calif.), M. G. Burnside (D W. Va.) and John W. McCormack (D Mass.).

Most opposition to the bill during the four-hour debate came from a group of Republicans who objected to sending more money "down a rat-hole". Principal opposition on the floor came from Lawrence H. Smith (R Wis.), A. L. Miller (R Neb.), John M. Vorys (R Ohio) and Fred L. Crawford (R Mich.).

The bill was then read for amendment, and the first balloting on a major foreign policy issue in 1950 took place. Two amendments designed to restrict the scope of Korean aid were adopted by a voice vote. One that would have required half of all aid to come from surplus U. S. agricultural crops was rejected, 55-95, on a standing vote. A move by John Vorys (R Ohio) to send the entire measure back to committee was rejected on a roll-call vote, 190-194.

Final Action

The House then defeated HR 5330 by a roll-call vote of 191-192. On the following day, however, a question as to the final outcome of the Korea aid bill was raised when CQ found an apparent error in the Congressional Record listing of the vote. William Lemke (R N. D.), who spoke for the measure and voted against recommital, was listed as voting against the bill, but also was listed as paired for it. If he had been recorded in favor it would have made the result 192-192, allowing Speaker Sam Rayburn (D Tex.) to decide. Lemke could not be reached for comment immediately. But if he decided to adhere to the pair (with Smith of Ohio) the result would have been unchanged. If he wished to be recorded for the bill, however, then it would have been up to the House to decide whether or not such action could be taken. House officials said they had no recollection of a previous situation such as this one, where a major vote outcome was involved.

Lemke ultimately decided to adhere to his pair with Smith, making the official result of the ballot 191-192.

AMENDMENTS AGREED TO

John Kee (D W. Va.) — Reduce aid from $150 million to $60 million. Voice vote.

Jacob K. Javits (R N. Y.) — Stipulate that aid be limited to period ending June 30, 1950. Voice vote.

AMENDMENT REJECTED

Monroe M. Redden (D N. C.) — Require half of aid to be in the form of U. S. surplus crops owned by the Commodity Credit Corporation. Division vote 55-95.

COMMITTEE

The day after the House defeated HR 5330, the original Senate measure (S 2319) was submitted to the House Foreign Affairs Committee. Secretary of State Acheson went before the group Jan. 30 to plead for continued Korean aid, and when a Committee vote was taken on the measure Jan. 31, the ballot was 17-1 in favor of the program. Only Robert B. Chiperfield (R Ill.) opposed the bill. Donald L. Jackson (R Calif.) did not vote.

The form in which the Committee reported S 2319 Jan. 31 was the form in which the bill became law. It earmarked $60 million for Korean economic help through June 30, 1950, authorized the loan of ten merchant ships, and extended to June 30, 1950, the time in which the President could spend $103 million in unused ECA-China funds. Acheson had said about $28-30 million of this sum could be used before the deadline.

REPORT

In its accompanying report, the Committee noted that S 2319 enlarged the scope of Far Eastern economic assistance by including Formosan aid, that it reduced the amount of Korean aid from $150 million to $60 million to reflect "a lessening of requirements", and that the measure "contains no pledge of continued assistance" in case Formosa were overrun by Chinese Communists.

The Formosan - aid feature was needed, the Committee said, because of "the rapid rate at which the position of government forces on the Chinese mainland" had deteriorated. "With the spread of the Civil War, Formosa has become increasingly important as a base for government forces, and finally virtually the last stronghold of anti - Communist forces."

The House Rules Committee placed S 2319 on the House calendar Feb. 2, 1950.

As debate got underway on S 2319, several Congressmen said they favored Korean aid, but qualified their supporting speeches. Eugene E. Cox (D Ga.) said, "My lack of confidence in the State Department is complete." John M. Vorys (R Ohio), House Foreign Affairs Committee member who helped kill the previous aid-to-Korea bill, said he still considered the program "strictly rat-hole money" but would support it because of the new Formosa features.

Majority Leader John W. McCormack (D Mass.) and John Kee (D W. Va.), chairman of the Foreign Affairs Committee, led support for the bill. McCormack said that "adverse and far-reaching effects throughout the world" would result from failure to aid Korea and Formosa. Kee said aid would preserve Korea from anything but "a major, widespread invasion" which is "not anticipated."

Lawrence H. Smith (R Wis.) opposed the bill. "The risk we are taking is too great", he said. Aid building up Korea would make it a "plum" for a Soviet grab, he said. William Lemke (R N. D.) criticized the State Department's "niggardly" attitude toward Far Eastern assistance, and urged Korean aid because "if the Communists move into South Korea — then World War III is on."

Final Action

The House approved the bill without amendment by a 240-134 roll-call vote Feb. 9, 1950. On the final ballot, 198 Democrats and 42 Republicans favored the bill; 91 Republicans and 42 Democrats and one American-Laborite opposed it. The final vote came after a motion by Rep. A. L. Miller (R Neb.) to recommit the measure with instructions to cut the Korean aid section from $60 million to $20 million was rejected by a roll-call vote of 137-239.

SENATE

The Senate had passed S 2319 in 1949. (See CQ Almanac, Vol. V, pp. 382-4.) The House action in subsequently amending the measure required Senate approval or disapproval, and on Feb. 10, 1950, the Senate took up the matter.

Without debate, and by a voice vote, the Senate concurred in the House's amendment including aid to Formosa within the bill's scope, and cutting the $150 million Korean-aid program down to $60 million.

Senate approval sent S 2319 to the White House.

LAW ENACTED

President Truman signed the measure Feb. 14, 1950. It became Public Law 447.

Liberalizing DP Law

SUMMARY

A haven for virtually every kind of refugee from World War II and its political aftermath was provided when President Truman on June 16, 1950, signed into law this bill expanding and liberalizing terms of the controversial Displaced Persons Act of 1948 (P.L. 774). His approval climaxed endeavors initiated to amend the 1948 law soon after the 81st Congress convened.

Passed first by the House June 2, 1949 (CQ Almanac, Vol. V, P. 371 ff.), HR 4567 was cleared at last in the Senate April 5, 1950, after 10 months of delays and postponements. Thence it had gone to a House-Senate conference where it had been worked on for two more months before the two chambers' differing versions could be reconciled. The compromise was finally endorsed by the House June 6 and the Senate June 7 by voice votes.

Chairman Pat McCarran (D Nev.), of the Senate Judiciary Committee, a stalwart opponent of any change in the 1948 Act, was blamed for delaying Senate action on the measure. McCarran sought actively to amend HR 4567 — after it came from the House —to make the 1948 provisions for DP admissions even more rigid than they were. Proponents of liberalization succeeded at last in overriding McCarran.

President Truman hailed the liberalizing measure with enthusiasm, saying it "corrects the discriminations inherent in the previous act." He had repeatedly assailed the 1948 Act as inadequate and discriminatory against both Jews and Roman Catholics. And he had promised liberalization of the law in his 1948 campaign for re-election to the White House.

Provisions

As signed by the President, HR 4567 provided for the following:

1. Admission into the U.S. before June 30, 1951, of a new grand total of 415,744 DPs, war orphans and persons of German ethnic origin who were forced to leave their homes, mostly in Eastern Europe, during and after World War II. The 1948 law had authorized admission of a total of 205,000 between June 30, 1948, and June 30, 1950, and had set aside half the regular German immigration quota of those two years for the expellees.

2. Admission within the grand total of:

300,000 bona fide DPs, i.e., persons under supervision of the International Regugee Organization;

54,744 German expellees by June 30, 1952;

18,000 Polish veterans of World War II now living in England, who have not been firmly resettled;

10,000 Greeks, one-quarter of whom must have close relatives in the U. S.;

2,000 persons from Venezia-Giulia who fled that country after it was ceded to Yugoslavia under the 1947 Italian peace treaty;

4,000 "Shanghai" refugees who were in China on July 1, 1948, or who, if they are not there now, have not been firmly resettled;

500 persons who may flee from Iron Curtain countries in the future;

5,000 displaced orphans; and

5,000 adopted war orphans from Western Europe.

3. Permanent status, in addition, for 15,000 persons in this country on a temporary basis on or after April 30, 1949, who fear return to their country because of possible political persecution.

4. Elimination of the 1948 law's provisions requiring 40 per cent of the DPs to be natives of Baltic states and 30 per cent to be farmers.

5. Establishment of Jan. 1, 1949, instead of Dec. 22, 1945, as the cut-off date by which persons must have reached the DP camps in the occupied zones of Italy, Germany or Austria to qualify for admission under the law.

6. Bar against entry of any DP if an Immigration inspector or Consular officer has knowledge that the DP is not eligible under American immigration laws.

7. Specification that only American citizens may be permitted to give employment and housing assurances to prospective DP entrants.

8. Authorize the Reconstruction Finance Corp. to loan the DP Commission $2.5 million to finance transportation of German expellees from Germany to a port of U.S. entry

9. Authorize the RFC to advance the Commission $5 million to lend voluntary agencies to finance transportation of DPs from U. S. ports of entry to destinations.

10. Extension of the date for winding up affairs of DP Commission to Aug. 31, 1951.

Votes

House passed HR 4567 by voice vote on June 2, 1949.

Senate voted to recommit the bill on Oct. 15, 1949, by roll-call vote of 36 to 30.

Senate passed the bill April 5, 1950, by roll call, 58 to 15, after adopting, 49 to 25, a substitute for the bill reported by the Judiciary Committee. (See P. 266).

House approved conference report June 6 and Senate, June 7, 1950. Both were voice votes.

President signed the bill June 16, 1950.

Party Stands

Democratic Platform:

"We pledge ourselves to legislation to admit a minimum of 400,000 displaced persons found eligible for United States citizenship without discrimination as to race or religion. We condemn the undemocratic action of the Republican Eightieth Congress in passing an inadequate and bigoted bill for this purpose, which law imposes un-American restrictions based on race and religion upon such admissions."

Republican Platform:

GOP cited as one of the "accomplishments of the Republican Congress" (80th Congress) the provision of a "haven for displaced persons". No further mention of displaced persons was made.

BACKGROUND

Bipartisan efforts to liberalize the 1948 DP Act began almost as soon as President Truman approved that law. These efforts amounted to little in the 80th Congress. But when the 81st Congress convened in January, 1949, some 10 bills were quickly introduced to ease the Act's provisions.

Out of this bill jam, Chairman Emanuel Celler (D N.Y.), of the House Judiciary Committee, chose HR 1344, the Administration - sponsored bill, for consideration. After some Committee amendments, it was re-introduced as a "clean" bill (HR 4567) and reported favorably by the Committee May 16, 1949.

It sailed through the House June 2, 1949, without serious opposition. Voice approval was given after some more amendments were added. The short debate was non-spectacular, and was confined mainly to technical explanations and to exchanges on the character of the DPs.

1949 Bill's Provisions

Principal provisions of HR 4567 as passed by the House were:

1. Admission of 339,000 DPs in three years instead of 205,000 in two years, plus permanent status for 15,000 in this country before April 30, 1949.

2. Extension of the program of earmarking 50 per cent of the German immigration quota for German Volksdeutsche to July 1, 1952. (Begun under the 1948 law, it was scheduled to expire in 1950)

3. Admission within the grand total of: 4,000 "Shanghai" refugees, 18,000 exiled Polish war veterans, and 15,000 persons from behind the Iron Curtain who may become refugees in the future.

4. Extension of the cut-off date for eligibility from Dec. 22, 1945, to Jan. 1, 1949.

5. Elimination of the provision requiring 40 per cent of the DPs to be natives of annexed areas, and substitution of a provision requiring instead that DPs must be selected without discrimination as to race, religion or national origin.

6. Increase from 3,000 to 5,000 in the number of displaced persons to be admitted as non-quota immigrants within the total authorized number of DP entries.

7. Continuation of the practice of charging visas to further quotas of a DP's native country under American immigration laws. This was limited to 25 per cent for any one year up to 1954, after which the charge would be 50 per cent.

8. Authorization of an appropriation of $2.5 million for the DP Commission to meet costs of getting DPs to U. S. port of entry, and establishment of a $5 million fund, to come from the RFC, for the Commission to lend to voluntary agencies to meet transportation costs from U. S. ports to inland destinations.

Reception In Senate

But in the Senate, where the bill was received in 1949, it was apparent that action would come more slowly than it had in the House. Sen. Pat McCarran (D Nev.), who didn't want the 1948 Act changed headed the Judiciary Committee to which the House-passed measure was referred. He was, as well, head of the Judiciary Subcommittee which got first crack at the bill.

This Subcommittee had had before it from the beginning of the 81st Congress a number of Senate bills to modify the then-existing DP program. Numerous hearings were held on each of them, both during and after House passage of HR 4567. But, despite "needling" by bipartisan advocates of changes in the DP law, McCarran did not hurry matters up.

In reply to a letter dated April 11, 1949, from Republican Sens. Homer Ferguson (Mich.), Irving M. Ives (N. Y.), Wayne Morse (Ore.), H. Alexander Smith (N. J.) and Leverett Saltonstall (Mass.), "respectfully" urging action on the pending measures, McCarran had this to say: "This matter is not going to be pigeonholed. . .it will be put forward."

After this came House passage of HR 4567, and this spurred some Senate members to new activity to get it through the Committee in time for floor action before the end of the 81st Congress' first session. But McCarran was not yet ready to put forward the bill. In mid-June, Sen. Alexander Wiley (R Wis.) made public a letter he had sent McCarran urging prompt action, but McCarran answered by pointing out that "worlds of data" still had to be studied by his Committee before final recommendations could be made on the bill.

Senate Hearings Begin

Subcommittee hearings on HR 4567 finally got started July 26, 1949, and 18 subsequent sessions were held. But on Aug. 24, when no action had yet been taken, Senate Majority Leader Scott W. Lucas (D Ill.) filed a resolution (S Res 160) to discharge the Judiciary Committee from further consideration of the measure. The step was interpreted to signify outright repudiation of McCarran by the Democratic party.

The Nevadan appeared unperturbed. He responded by announcing he was going to Europe to study the DP situation further, and might return with facts upon which entirely new legislation might be based. Lucas promptly warned McCarran that action on the discharge petition would not be held over pending his (McCarran's) return, and that the Senate, likely as not, would act in his absence.

In the face of this, McCarran went ahead with plans for his voyage anyway. He sought and received unanimous Senate consent to his trip, and he departed Sept. 14.

In McCarran's absence, members of the Judiciary Committee favorable to HR 4567 got busy. Spurred by Ferguson (R Mich.) and Harley M. Kilgore (D W. Va.), the Committee Oct. 11 voted, 7 to 3, in favor of S Res 160, and on Oct. 12, the full Committee reported the DP bill to the Senate without recommendation. No report on the merits was issued.

McCarran's European Cable

The Senate itself reacted with less fervor. Committee action in defiance of an absent chairman is rarely endorsed by either body of Congress. In this case, it was not. Floor debate began Oct. 13, with Sen. Harry P. Cain (R Wash.) leading the opponents and acting on behalf of McCarran. The Nevadan had just cabled an appeal from Europe for further leave from the Senate, coupling with it an objection to passage of the DP bill in his absence. McCarran had asserted in his cable that his personal investigation in Europe up to that point indicated "the need of tightening the existing law with respect to the security of the United States."

In response to this appeal, Sens. Cain and James O. Eastland (D Miss.) Oct. 15 offered a motion to recommit HR 4567 with instructions to the Committee to report the measure back by Jan. 25, 1950. The motion carried, 36 to 30.

SENATE

Committee

The Senate Judiciary Committee, under terms of the Senate's first-session directive, had three weeks to act on the pending DP bill after the second session convened Jan. 3, 1950. McCarran, who had returned from Europe by that time, scheduled new hearings on HR 4567 — hearings that ultimately were not even begun until after the bill was reported — and simultaneously opened new fire on the DP bill and the DP program in general.

In a report to the Senate Jan. 6 on his tour of DP camp installations in Europe, McCarran struck out at the measure, charging that pressure groups "with seemingly unlimited money . . . are using a relatively few war-displaced persons, virtually all of whom are being resettled or repatriated, for the purpose of destroying our immigration barriers."

He charged that a "complete breakdown" in administration of the 1948 DP Act "has opened the gates to persons who will not beome good citizens and who will become ready recruits in subversive organizations to tear down the democracy of the United States."

McCarran Called "Roadblock"

Chairman Emanuel Celler (D N.Y.), of the House Judiciary Committee and sponsor of HR 4567, then replied: "The roadblock offered by the Senator to the passage of my bill is a cruel example of man's inhumanity to man."

On Jan. 10, McCarran went on to disclose he had taken testimony the previous October in Germany from an employee of the DP Commission—identified as John W. Cutler Jr., a refugee "selector" — who said he was ordered to admit to the United States refugees whom the Army regarded as Communists or possible Communists. Cutler had testified, McCarran related, that if a refugee "claims Jewish blood" he can "immediately go to the United States."

The DP Commission immediately retorted in a public statement that the complaints "abound in untruths, half truths and simple lies." The Commission said Cutler had a reputation among his colleagues in Europe of having "a strong personal bias against persons of a particular faith". McCarran replied by accusing Ugo Carusi, the Commission chairman, of calling him a "liar".

Its deadline for reporting the bill arrived, meanwhile, before the Committee could get around to any of the scheduled public hearings. On Jan. 24, the Committee approved, 10 to 3, a bill authorizing the entry of 320,000 DPs and German expellees by June 30, 1951, instead of specifying 339,000 DPs exclusively as the House had. The Senate group also generally tightened up the House bill's provisions.

McCarran said he found the measure "generally satisfactory". On Jan. 25, in accordance with instructions, he submitted the measure to the Senate.

A dissenting view was taken by Sens. Harley W. Kilgore (D W.Va.), Frank P. Graham (D N.C.) and Homer Ferguson (R Mich.), the three who voted against the bill. They promised a minority report.

Those who voted for the bill were Sens. McCarran, James O. Eastland, (D Miss.), Warren G. Magnuson (D Wash.), Herbert R. O'Conor (D Md.), Estes Kefauver (D Tenn.), Grant Withers (D Ky.), Alexander Wiley (R Wis.), William Langer (R N.D.), Forrest C. Donnell (R Mo.) and William E. Jenner (R Ind.).

The reported bill provided:

1. A new definition of displaced person, to include German Volksdeutsche expellees as well as persons defined as displaced by the IRO and eligible for admission under DP legislation.

2. Admission of 325,000 DPs together with expellees, plus 5,000 orphans adopted by overseas personnel of the U. S. government; 54,744 expellees alone, and permanent status for 15,000 persons temporarily in this country as of April 30, 1949.

3. Admission with the 325,000 of: 290,000 displaced persons; 2,000 displaced Czechs who fled their country after Jan. 1, 1948; 10,000 Greeks; 18,000 Polish veterans residing in Great Britain; and 5,000 displaced orphans.

4. Elimination of the provisions for admission of 15,000 persons from behind the Iron Curtain and the 4,000 "Shanghai" refugees.

5. Reinstatement of the House-eliminated 30 per cent priority for agriculturists, plus a strengthening clause requiring a DP, seeking eligibility under this priority, to have had at least two years' farm experience.

6. Reinstatement of the 40 per cent priority for DPs from annexed areas, in effect the Baltic states.

7. Selection of DPs without discrimination on account of religion.

8. Prohibition against admission of persons who have been Communists or Marxists, or who have participated in any movement hostile to the American form of government.

9. Establishment of a joint Congressional committee to investigate the problem of German expellees.

Other provisions of the House bill were retained.

Minority Report Filed

The Kilgore-Graham-Ferguson minority report was submitted Feb. 14, and in conjunction with the report the three also offered the text of a proposed substitute for the Committee-backed bill. The dissenters won support in varying degree from four of their fellow members of the Committee.

While not signing the report, two Committee members — Sens. Warren G. Magnuson (D Wash.) and Estes Kefauver (D Tenn.) — signed a supplemental statement saying they subscribed to the minority views. They had voted in favor of the bill in the Committee, they said, largely because of the time deadline imposed by the Senate. Still another statement was submitted by Herbert R. O'Conor (D Md.) and Alexander Wiley (R Wis.), who said they did not endorse the minority report but favored "further liberalization" of the bill reported by the Committee.

The minority report directed its fire chiefly against three items in the Committee-backed bill. It berated: the authorized entry of German expellees in the same category with displaced persons, while providing a separate authorization for the expellees alone; the "discriminatory" provisions requiring 40 per cent of all visas to go to persons from the so-called Baltic areas and 30 per cent to have proof of two years agricultural experience; and the introduction of "administrative complexities" by giving final determination of entrance eligibility to the Immigration and Consular Services.

Substitute Bill Suggested

The text of the bill the trio proposed to substitute for the Committee bill followed that of the House-approved measure with these exceptions:

1. It provided for admission of 10,000 Greeks, giving preference to orphans.

2. It permitted the entry of 5,000, orphans adopted by Americans overseas.

3. It required that any transportation of DPs, the cost of which the U. S. government defrayed, would have to be in American vessels.

4. It eliminated the authorized entry of 15,000 recent political refugees, but permitted the entry as displaced persons of Czechoslovakians who fled their country between Jan. 1, 1948 and Jan. 1, 1949.

5. It barred persons who adhere to any political or economic system or philosophy directed toward the destruction of free competitive enterprise.

6. It authorized the RFC to lend the DP Commission $2.5 million to finance processing and transportation of German expellees, and suggested the calling of an international conference to deal with the expellee problem on a broader basis.

Hearings

Because the Senate Judiciary Committee was required under the 1949 session's agreement to report its DP bill on Jan. 25, 1950, the measure itself was consequently pending in the Senate chamber when, in early February, McCarran's group opened new hearings on HR 4567.

Accordingly, hearings were being held while the bill prompting them was being debated. What happened was that after a week's debate, the Senate decided to defer final action on HR 4567 until early April. And by that time, the hearings were completed.

Most witnesses at the 1950 hearings, which lasted into the middle of March were connected with the Displaced Persons Commission In Europe, or had been.

Initial witness at the opening hearing Feb. 3 was Edward Glazek, formerly employed by the Commission in Germany. Glazek complained of the administration of the 1948 Act and said the Commission had admitted many undesirable persons under the program because of faulty screening processes. The others who followed Glazek and who testified similarly were:

John W. Cutler Jr., a Commission "selector," Almanza Tripp, officer of the U. S. Immigration and Naturalization Service assigned to check on DPs in Munich, Germany, Donald W. Main, a Commission senior officer, Benjamin Vaughan Jr., a Commission employee, and Louis G. Craig, a "selector."

Testimony in defense of the Commission's activities was given by Alexander E. Squadrilli, the Commission's European coordinator, Meyer D. Bashein, a Commission senior officer, Gertrude Magill Ruskin, another senior officer, Ben Kaplan, executive assistant to Squadrilli, Ugo Carusi, chairman of the DP Commission, and Harry N. Rosenfield, a commissioner.

Watson B. Miller, U. S. Commissioner of Immigration and Naturalization, described as "great" the difficulties involved in deporting DPs who are found to have entered this country through fraudulent means.

Other witnesses were R. B. Hudgins, county agent at Appomattox, Va., L. M. Walker, Virginia Agriculture Commissioner, and Stanley Day, county agent, Anne Arundel County, Md., all of whom complained that DPs had been inadequately screened and many had therefore proved totally unsatisfactory for farm work even though they claimed farm experience.

"Mystery" Witnesses

Also heard were two "mystery" witnesses who gave testimony anonymously. One witness, described as a former DP Commission employee, said he and his fellow employees had been instructed at the time McCarran made his tour of the DPs camps in Europe to be very careful when questioned by the Senator, and to refrain from divulging anything that might end their jobs. The other unidentified witness was described as a former member of the Army's Criminal Investigation Division. He testified that there had been widespread black market activity among the DPs, particularly the Jews. The witnesses were never publicly identified.

Jenner-Kilgore Clash

On March 15, the day before the hearings were finally closed, a sharp clash occurred between two members of the Judiciary Subcommittee, Sens. Harley M. Kilgore (D W. Va.) and William E. Jenner (R Ind.). Jenner was presiding at the time. DP Commissioner Rosenfield was on the witness stand and he had been accusing the Subcommittee of spreading "phony" charges that DPs entered the U. S. through fraud. Rosenfield went on to accuse the Subcommittee's counsel, Richard Arens, of making "snide remarks" about Kilgore in the Senator's absence.

Kilgore joined in at this point, stating he felt the Subcommittee had been "derelict in its duty" in letting Arens "reflect" on a Senator.

Jenner shouted, "I stand back of Mr. Arens 100 percent." Kilgore responded by walking out of the room, after first turning to Jenner and remarking, "Unfortunately I can't yell as loud as you can."

Debate

While the Judiciary Committee was still holding hearings, the Senate itself began to debate HR 4567 on Feb. 28. By this time, this measure, which had been reported by the Committee, was widely called the McCarran bill, and the substitute measure which Sens. Kilgore, Graham and Ferguson had readied was called the Kilgore bill.

This latter had acquired a long, bipartisan list of additional sponsors: Sens. Paul H. Douglas (D Ill.), James E. Murray (D Mont.), Matthew M. Neely (D W. Va.), William Benton (D Conn.), Hubert H. Humphrey (D Minn.), Francis J. Myers (D Pa.), Herbert H. Lehman (D N. Y.), Irving M. Ives (R N. Y.), H. Alexander Smith (R N. J.), Wayne Morse (R Ore.), Leverett Saltonstall (R Mass.), Robert C. Hendrickson (R N. J.), Ralph E. Flanders (R Vt.), and Edward J. Thye (R Minn.)

McCarran Leads Off

McCarran opened debate Feb. 28 with a three-hour speech in which he scored administration of the present law by the DP Commission and charged that Soviet agents and potential subversives had reportedly entered the United States under the guise of displaced persons. Eastland (D Miss.) supported him.

Kilgore responded that such charges against the Commission were "unsubstantiated". Members of the DP Commission, who Kilgore said had sought but never received opportunity to reply officially to McCarran's charges, listened to the debate from the gallery.

Lehman, March 1 denied the displaced persons program was a threat to national security and declared refugees are "screened and rescreened" and put through "much more stringent" tests than normal immigrants. Harry Cain (R Wash.) said the bill would provide a haven for every European who decides "to take off for American because of political changes in their home lands."

Parliamentary Move

A parliamentary maneuver also was attempted March 1 by McCarran, who first offered—then dropped—a suggestion that the Senate adopt en bloc the Committee amendments to the House bill. He said this would produce a "clean bill" and Senators might then better know exactly what the legislation looked like and meant.

He explained the Senate could adopt the amendments in this way without jeopardizing the right of any Senator to offer new amendments later, or to try to substitute a new bill. He drew some support for this tactic from Kilgore, but Kilgore later expressed skepticism when Alben W. Barkley, in the Chair, said a committee amendment, once agreed to, cannot be amended except by a motion to reconsider the vote on the amendment. McCarran finally withdrew his suggested plan after further arguments against it were raised by Scott W. Lucas (D Ill.) and Ferguson.

Agreement to Vote

Meanwhile, for three days, Senate Majority Leader Scott Lucas (D Ill.) had been repeatedly trying to set a time for voting on the measure. His attempts, however, were unsuccessful, and at one point he charged William Langer (R N.D.), an opponent of the Kilgore substitute, with "filibustering" against the measure.

The charge was leveled after Langer forced the Senate to quit work March 6 in mid-afternoon. Langer earlier in the day had objected to a unanimous consent request for a March 8 vote. He caught Lucas out of the Senate chamber and promptly moved, shortly after 3 p.m., for a recess.

The next day, Lucas sought recurrently to get unanimous consent to a voting date and time, but again Langer blocked all Lucas' efforts, saying he would not permit a vote until Senators had a full day to examine the printed record of hearings on the measure.

Minority Leader Kenneth S. Wherry (R Neb.), also insisted that acting on a bill without full benefit of all testimony on it was "no way to legislate." Finally the Senate adjourned at 7:21 p.m., after Wherry raised a point of no quorum and the maneuver failed to produce a majority of Senators. The adjournment meant the DP bill lost its top priority on the next day's Senate calendar.

However, a move early March 8 by Lucas was accepted without objection and the bill again became the immediate order of business. Renewed efforts to reach a voting agreement began. Lucas first suggested a March 15 deadline, but Forrest C. Donnell (R Mo.) objected, also on the grounds that printed transcripts of the hearings would not be available. McCarran proposed the vote be delayed until April 4. He explained he planned to spend the next three weeks in Nevada where he had a primary campaign coming up. Lucas declined to accept the proposal, saying it would have a bad psychological effect on the bill. Lucas accused McCarran of not wanting "any kind of DP bill." McCarran shot back that Lucas was "bungling" the DP debate.

Lucas then brought in a cloture petition. He secured 16 signatures, enough to bring the cloture motion to a vote, but he never laid it before the Senate.

The reason was that Lucas ultimately secured agreement that consideration of the bill would be postponed to March 31, at which time it would again be discussed, with voting on it scheduled for April 3.

Bitter Exchanges

During the initial stages of the debate, bitter exchanges cropped up on the Senate floor between Sens. Herbert H. Lehman (D N.Y.) and James Eastland (D Miss.). The two lawmakers first clashed on the Senate floor March 3 when Eastland was reading a statement on the DP bill. Eastland contended the IRO which initially designates DPs eligible to come to the U.S., "is shot through with bribery and corruption," and the U.S. should not place credence in its security reports.

Lehman attempted to dispute this. Eastland replied that witnesses heard by the Judiciary Committee confirmed his opinion that careful checks are not made on DP's before they come to the United States and he added this made the good, American blood boil in his veins.

Lehman curtly replied that "no better American blood flows through the veins of the Senator from Mississippi (Eastland) than through the Senator from New York."

Eastland replied he was not making a personal remark and lauded Lehman as a "great American."

On March 7, Eastland again took the floor and charged Lehman with resorting to "deliberate untruth" in answering his (Eastland's) attacks on the DP program. Eastland twice hurled such charges at Lehman. Both times he was ordered to his seat by John J. Sparkman (D Ala.) who was then in the chair. But after each seating, Eastland was permitted to "proceed in order" after motions to that effect were offered, first by Lucas, the second time by Harry Flood Byrd (D Va.).

Eastland said that while he was delivering his March 3 speech on the DP measure, he had yielded to Lehman and had slipped down to the Senate restaurant for lunch. In his absence, Eastland claimed, Lehman "attacked me without warning." He quoted Lehman as saying he had heard more misstatements and inaccuracies (in Eastland's speech) than he ever had thought possible on the floor of the Senate. He said there was "not a word of truth" in what Lehman had said.

Lehman, rising to answer Eastland, made it plain he had not charged Eastland with deliberate misstatements. Rather, he said, Eastland, in a "heat of enthusiasm" had been led into giving erroneous statements and "statements that could only be called misstatements of fact." The New Yorker then detailed the alleged misstatements.

Final Action

On March 31, the Senate returned to the consideration of the bill. The session, however, quickly resolved itself into another bout of bitter wrangling between supporters of the McCarran bill and supporters of the Kilgore substitute.

They rehashed previous arguments, but after two hours of debate, the two factions suddenly decided to quit talking entirely, and to have a showdown April 5. Senators agreed to meet at 2 p. m. that afternoon, and to stay in continuous session until the bill and all amendments were acted on.

The final showdown occurred close to midnight on the appointed day of April 5, and followed a long, grueling battle over some of the nearly four score amendments which had been offered.

Disposition of the McCarran and Kilgore measures was as follows:

Vote On Passage

The Senate voted 49 to 25 to substitute the Kilgore bill for the McCarran, Committee - reported one. Then the Senate decided to pass the over - all measure, as it then stood after the substitution, by a 58 to 15 roll-call ballot. McCarran was among those voting for final passage.

A breakdown of these votes show that there were:

For the Kilgore substitute, 25 Democrats and 24 Republicans.

Against the Kilgore substitute, 11 Democrats and 14 Republicans.

On final passage, 27 Democrats and 31 Republicans voting in the affirmative.

Against passage were 8 Democrats and 7 Republicans.

Before the action was completed, approximately 80 votes were taken on amendments, most of which were offered individually, but some of which were offered en bloc. It was the largest number of amendments to any one bill acted on by either Congressional body up to that point in the session.

McCarran proposed by far the largest number of amendments. As Judiciary Committee chairman, he also offered for final Senate decision all the Committee's changes in HR 4567 as it had come from the House. Some of these changes were accepted, but most were rejected, and then the Committee bill itself was thrown aside in favor of the Kilgore substitute.

In the series of votes, party lines were repeatedly shattered and the margin of victory for the Administration was, with few exceptions, narrow. One sidelight occurred shortly after 6 p. m. on April 5 when Robert A. Taft (R Ohio) discovered that the Senate had amended one section of the bill that did not exist — it had already been knocked out. McCarran got approval on a voice vote of a minor, technical amendment and was offering another when Taft discovered the mistake. The Senate by unanimous consent backed up and removed its mistake.

Changes In Substitute

As it was passed in the Senate, the DP bill was substantially in line with the Kilgore substitute as originally proposed. Some important changes were made in this substitute, however, before final passage. These were:

1. The addition of a provision admitting 20,000 adopted war orphans from Western Europe on a non-quota basis.

2. Admission of 5,000 former residents of Venezia-Giulia who fled after that area was placed under Yugoslav sovereignty by the 1947 Italian peace treaty.

3. A requirement that job and housing assurances for DPs must come only from American citizens.

4. Ban against admission of any DP if an Immigration or Consular official knows he or she is ineligible under American immigration laws.

5. Authorization for deportation of any DP found admitted under fraudulent circumstances.

6. Admission only of those refugees who have not been firmly resettled since they became displaced.

Parliamentary Snarl

Voting on the DP bill was complicated from the parliamentary point of view. Senate rules required that a decision first be made on the Committee-backed McCarran bill before action could be taken on the substitute measure. This meant the Senate had first to take up all the Committee's changes in the House's version of HR 4567, plus any amendments to the Committee bill that were offered from the floor, before the Senate could turn to the substitute.

When the substitute was finally reached, it also was bombarded with amendments, which had to be passed upon before the substitute could be brought to a vote.

This is the way the voting on various amendments offered to the DP bill went.

First the Senate took up amendmen's offered by McCarran to HR 4567 on behalf of his Judiciary Committee. During the period when the Senate voted on these, the only proposals accepted from the Senate floor were those to amend the Committee amendments. (All McCarran amendments listed below were for the Committee; the Cain, Humphrey and Knowland amendments were offered to the Committee ones.)

AMENDMENTS REJECTED

McCarran — Three amendments, all pertaining to changing the definition of a displaced person eligible under the program to include German expellees in total authorized for admission. First amendment was technical, the second grammatical and the third provided the actual change in definition. All on roll-call votes, 37-48, 38-47, and 37-48, respectively.

Harry P. Cain (R Wash.) — Amendment to third Committee amendment fixing cutoff date at April 21, 1947, for determining eligibility of DP's. Roll-call vote, 40-45.

McCarran — Require 40 per cent of DP's to be refugees from the Baltic states annexed by a foreign power after World War II. Roll call, 39-45.

McCarran — Require DP admissions to be charged against 50 per cent of regular annual immigration quotas of country in which they were born. Roll call, 37-44.

Hubert H. Humphrey (D Minn.) — Permit admission of 25,000 adopted war orphans from all European countries. Division.

McCarran — Require at least 30 per cent of DP's admitted to be agricultural workers with two years experience. Roll call, 33-49.

McCarran — Give Immigration and Naturalization Service and American Consular Service final say on who is admitted under program, superseding present authority now vested in DP Commission. Roll-call vote, 41-42.

AMENDMENTS ACCEPTED

William F. Knowland (R Calif.)— Amendment to Committee amendment. Admit 4,000 Shanghai refugees now on the Philippine Island of Samar. (This amendment by Knowland was offered as an amendment to the Committee amendment requiring 40 per cent of the DPs to be Baltic state refugees. Offered in two portions, the Knowland proposal was accepted in toto, the first half by division vote, the latter by voice. While it was ultimately thrown out when the Senate rejected the 40 per cent plan, the provision was in the Kilgore substitute and thus in the bill as it passed.)

The remainder of the Committee amendments were then accepted en bloc, after Lucas proposed such a procedure to speed up final action on the bill. Lucas said he didn't believe any of the amendments "are any good" but he wanted them accepted so the Senate would be in a position to act with less delay on the substitute.

Secondly, the Senate took up amendments offered from the floor to the pending bill itself, and not to the Committee alterations, which by this time had been settled. Here is what happened to these "floor amendments."

AMENDMENTS REJECTED

McCarran — Permit only citizens of this country to give required job and housing assurances for refugees seeking entry under the program. Roll call, 41-42.

McCarran — Authorize $5 million in government loans to public or private agencies to finance the transportation and reception of DP's from ports to their final destinations in this country. Roll call, 32-46.

McCarran—Halt DP program when American unemployment totals 4 million or when couples forced to "double up" in living quarters total 2 million. Roll call, 17-61.

McCarran — Halt program when unemployment totals 6 million. Roll call, 28-49.

AMENDMENTS ACCEPTED

McCarran — Authorize a $10 million appropriation for the DP Commission to finance reception, processing and transportation of German expellees from Germany to U.S. ports of entry. Division.

Thirdly, the Senate was then able to vote on amendments offered to the Kilgore substitute. Here is what happened to these amendments — which had to be disposed of before the final ballot could be taken on the Kilgore substitute itself:

AMENDMENTS REJECTED

Dennis Chavez (D N.M.) — Include Spanish refugees among eligible DP's. Voice vote, and, later, on roll call, 34-40.

Humphrey — Admit 20,000 adopted war orphans. Division. Vote reconsidered on motion adopted by roll call 42-32.

McCarran — Declare ineligible any DP who has been once resettled but later seeks to enter under the program. Voice.

Langer — Authorize admission of 5,000 Arab refugees and include Palestine expellees under those specified as eligible displaced persons. Voice.

McCarran — Include in Czechoslovakian provision those persons who fled the country any time prior to Jan. 1, 1949. Division.

McCarran — New definition of DP, eliminating any reference to definition contained in constitution of International Refugee Organization. Roll call, 24-46.

George W. Malone (R Nev.) — Final determination of those eligible under program shall be vested in Immigration and Naturalization Service and American Consular Service. Roll call, 24-47.

McCarran — Create Joint Congressional committee to study problem of German expellees. Voice.

Cain — Fix new cutoff date of April 21, 1947 instead of Jan. 1, 1949. Roll call, 35-43.

Langer — Halt program when unemployment reaches a total of 10 million. Division.

AMENDMENTS ACCEPTED

McCarran — Admit only those Polish soldiers and "Shanghai" refugees who have not taken permanent residence in any other country. Voice.

McCarran—Require assurances for DPs to come only from American citizens and to bar those given by aliens. Voice vote.

Homer Ferguson (R Mich.) — Bar the admission of any DP if the consular officer or immigration inspector knows he is ineligible under American immigration laws. Voice.

Irving M. Ives (R N.Y.) — Increase the number of authorized admissions under program from 339,000 to 344,000 to admit 5,000 Venezia-Guilia refugees. Voice.

William Langer (R N.D.) — Permit transfer of unused German expellee quotas for 1950 and 1951 to 1952. Voice.

Robert A. Taft (R Ohio) — Protect regular German immigration quotas by charging German expellees admitted under program to immigration quota of their country of origin instead of against German quota. Voice.

William E. Jenner (R Ind.) — Require dissolution of DP Commission by August 31, 1951, two months after last authorized admissions under program. Voice.

Ferguson—Include Germans driven out of Upper Silesia, Danzig and East Prussia among expellees of German ethnic origin instead of among native-born Germans. Voice.

Humphrey — Admit 20,000 adopted war orphans. Division.

Herbert R. O'Conor (D Md.) — Discourage fraud in obtaining visas by permitting deportation of those DP's found admitted under such circumstances. Voice.

Garrett L. Withers (D Ky.) — Require determination of eligibility of DP's to be made by American citizens only. Voice.

Kilgore — Amendment in nature of a substitute for McCarran bill. Roll call, 49-25.

CONFERENCE

The Senate's action in passing a bill differing so greatly from the original House version of HR 4567 resulted in a joint House-Senate conference committee which reconciled the two versions after weeks of tussling over a compromise draft.

On May 31 the conferees finally reached agreement on a compromise that boosted the total number of DPs permitted to enter the country to 341,000 and extended the law until June 30, 1951. The authorized admission of German expellees and adopted war orphans, plus permanent status for persons already in this country on a temporary basis raised the over-all total to 415,744.

Administrative and other terms of the bill were left as the Senate had worked them out. Over-all entry totals were revised so that:

1. The number of adopted war orphans eligible for admission on a non-quota basis was cut from the Senate's 20,000 to 5,000. Left intact was the provision for admission of 5,000 displaced orphans within the general total of displaced persons.

2. The 15,000 potential political refugees from Eastern Europe was cut to 500, while specific provisions relating to Czechoslovakians were eliminated, since they might qualify as displaced persons under the new Jan. 1, 1949, cutoff date.

3. The Senate provision for admission of 10,000 Greek refugees was accepted with the proviso that 2,500 of them had to be relatives of Greeks already in this country.

4. The 5,000 former residents of Venezia-Giulia were reduced to a total of 2,000.

Conference Report Approved

The House approved the compromise June 6 and the Senate added its endorsement June 7. Both actions were taken by voice.

House passage was voted without debate. In the Senate, Pat McCarran (D Nev.) made a speech predicting the compromise legislation would leave the door open for infiltration of Communist agents and other subversives in the guise of DP's.

LAW APPROVED

The President signed the measure into law June 16, 1950.

In a formal statement, he declared: "It is especially gratifying to me that this expression of American fairness and generosity has been brought about by groups and organizations broadly representative of all parts of our country."

He pointed out that countrymen of persons to be admitted under the legislation "have brought to us in the past the best of their labor, their hatred of tyranny and their love of freedom".

He had every confidence, he added, "that the new Americans who will come to our country under the provisions of the present bill will also make a substantial contribution to our national well-being".

Present when the President signed the bill were: Sens. Herbert H. Lehman (D N. Y.), Harley M. Kilgore (D W. Va.), Francis J. Myers (D Pa.) Homer Ferguson (R Mich.), Reps. Emanuel Celler (D N. Y.), Francis E. Walter (D Pa.) and Frank Fellows (R Maine); Harry N. Rosenfield, and Edward M. O'Connor, members of the DP Commission, James J. McTigue, the Commission's general counsel, and Watson B. Miller, Commissioner of Immigration and Naturalization.

LOBBY STANDS

For major organizations registering a stand on HR 4567 when it was before the House, see CQ Almanac, Vol. V, p. 374.

Other organizations appeared before the Senate Judiciary Committee in 1949, while the bill was still in the House, to support the amendment of HR 4567, or other bills, to provide for the admission of the German expellees on the same basis as bona fide displaced persons whose status is defined by the International Refugee Organization. These organizations were:

The United Action Committee for Expellees, National Council for Prevention of War (which also advocated more freedom of immigration generally), Anti-Partition League, American Aid Society for Needy and Displaced Persons of Southeastern Europe, Committee for Christian Action in Central Europe, Legislation Action Committee for the Resettlement of Danubian-German Refugees, American Relief for Germany Inc., Steuben Society of America, and the American Banater Relief Society.

The Institute of Arab-American Affairs advocated the admission of Arab refugees from the Arab-Israeli war, and the American Friends Mission of Palestine supported the admission of more Arabs, particularly students.

The Polish-American Congress suppoted the provision of HR 4567 admitting qualified former Polish soldiers now residing in England.

The Order of Ahepa, an organization of Greek-Americans, advocated the admission of 50,000 Greeks, both adults and children. The American Legion opposed any change in the 1948 DP Act, and the Veterans of Foreign Wars said it opposed the admission of any displaced persons. The National Lutheran Council said it wanted larger numbers of German expellees brought in under the law.

Following release of the proposed text of the Kilgore substitute for the Senate Judiciary Committee's DP bill, three church organizations issued a joint statement supporting the minority measure. The National Lutheran Council was one of these. The other two were the Federal Council of Churches of Christ in America and the War Relief Services, National Catholic Welfare Council.

At the same time 11 well-known Americans also issued a joint statement praising the substitute bill. The signers were: Gen. Lucius D. Clay, Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt, James A. Farley, Maj. Gen. William J. Donovan, James F. O'Neil, Manchester, N. H., Judge Joseph Proskauer, of New York, James L. Kraft, president of Kraft Cheese Co., Mark Ethridge, publisher of the Louisville, Ky., Courier-Journal, Fred Lazarus, Cincinnati, Ohio, Harry Bullis, board chairman, General Mills, and Thomas J. Watson, president, International Business Machines.

Conscientious Objectors Fund

HR 5963, S 2496

A plan to use $1,389,145 earned by conscientious objectors during World War II to buy books for European libraries was defeated by the House. The Senate, however, passed a similar bill which then was approved by a House Committee, but failed to get subsequent action.

The House bill (HR 5953) was approved by the Foreign Affairs Committee Aug. 24, 1949. Taken up in the House March 1, 1950, it was defeated on a roll-call vote, 265-102. (See p. 262.)

The measure would have used the money involved to buy technical books to be sent to European libraries by CARE. The money was earned by CO's during the war, but was kept for them in a special Treasury fund as they were not allowed to receive money themselves.

Stefan Move Approved

Karl Stefan (R Neb.) moved that the enacting clause of the bill be stricken. This would have had the effect of completely killing the measure. His motion carried on division vote 92-27, on teller 127-46, and then on roll call 265-102.

Walter H. Judd (R Minn.) backed the bill, saying: "Those who earned this money, the conscientious objectors themselves, said they felt that at this stage of recovery the intellectual hungers and the spiritual hungers of the people of the countries involved were even more important than the physical hungers, and less has been done to satisfy them."

But opponents said the money should be given to American libraries. It also was suggested that surplus potatoes, rather than books, should be sent abroad. Pat Sutton (D Tenn.) said, "I am not sympathetic with conscientious objectors and I still think we should keep the books in our own libraries."

Companion Senate Bill

A companion bill (S 2496) was cosponsored in the Senate by John Sparkman (D Ala.) and Leverett Saltonstall (R Mass.). On March 25, Saltonstall was designated by the Senate Armed Services Committee to be a one-man Subcommittee to study S 2496 — and the same day, Sparkman testified before him in favor of their bill. Saltonstall reported the measure favorably.

The bill also picked up the backing of the full Armed Services group, which reported it to the Senate May 11. The upper chamber passed it without objection on June 8.

Contributions To International Groups

HJ Res 334—P.L. 806

Without extensive debate, Congress approved legislation (H J Res 334) raising the ceilings on United States contributions to five international organizations.

The resolution was introduced by Rep. Thomas E. Morgan (D Pa.) on Aug. 4, 1949, at the request of the State Department. The State Department had asked that all limits be removed from U. S. payments to the organizations. After a two-day hearing, however, the House Foreign Affairs Committee voted merely to raise the existing ceilings.

The Committee reported the bill favorably on Aug. 11, 1949. The measure provided the following: (Organization listed first; existing annual limitation listed second and limitation under HJ Res 334 listed third.)

American International Institute for the Protection of Childhood; $2,000, $24,000 for United States contributions from July 1, 1946, to June 30, 1949. Annual Contribution thereafter not to exceed $10,000.
Food and Agriculture Organization; $1,250,000, $2,000,000 per annum.
South Pacific Commission; $20,000, $75,000 per annum.
World Health Organization; $1,920,000, $560,000 for working capital fund and annual contribution not to exceed $3,000,000.
International Labor Organization; $1,091,739, $1,750,000 per annum.

The House took up the bill June 21, 1950, and passed it without amendment June 22 on a 209-91 roll-call vote. (Vote on Page 262.) Opponents based their stands on economy. Supporters of the measure said the money was an investment in future peace.

Senate Also Approved

The Senate Foreign Relations Committee held hearings July 10 and Aug. 11 on the bill. Representatives of the State, Labor and Agriculture Departments and the Public Health Service and Children's Bureau testified in favor of the measure.

The Committee approved the bill with one amendment—to specify that additional contributions could be made for special projects not regularly budgeted and to specify that the Secretary of State shall report annually to Congress on money spent under the bill.

The Senate passed the bill Sept. 13 on voice vote without further amendment and without debate. The House agreed to the Senate amendment by voice vote Sept. 14, and the bill was signed by the President Sept. 21. The measure became Public Law No. 806.

Investment Guarantees

HR 8083

SUMMARY

The House of Representatives in 1950 endorsed a major aspect of President Truman's plan to assist underdeveloped areas of the world — it approved legislation (HR 8083) providing certain guarantees to investors sending their capital abroad under the plan. However, the Senate failed to act on the legislation, so it did not become law.

The investment guarantee aspect of the Point Four plan had also failed to receive Congressional action in 1949, although bills on this topic had been introduced and favorably reported by various Congressional committees.

President Truman made two pleas in 1950 for guarantee legislation, and ultimately the House approved HR 8083 on July 12 by a formal roll-call vote of 195-151.

Provisions

As passed by the House, HR 8083:

1. Authorized the Export-Import Bank to guarantee "for an appropriate fee" private investments abroad under the Point Four program up to a limit of $250 million.

2. Specified that guarantees would assure investors that their earnings in foreign currencies from these investments could be converted into U. S. dollars.

3. Specified that guarantees would assure investors of compensation in the event their foreign properties were expropriated, confiscated or otherwise seized by public authority in the countries affected.

4. Required the negotiation of treaties or "agreements" between the U. S. and the country receiving the private investment prohibiting certain discriminations against U. S. nationals.

5. Required that guarantees would only be offered investments that did not present "uneconomic and unsound" duplications of existing ones.

6. Provided for immediate conversion of foreign earnings into U. S. dollars when conversion was required.

BACKGROUND

In Point Four of his Inaugural Address of Jan. 20, 1949, President Truman called for a bold U. S. program to aid underdeveloped countries of the world. (See CQ Almanac, Vol. V, Page 392.) One aspect of the program was to be a flow of private American capital to underdeveloped areas, to help build them up. In connection with this aspect, several bills were introduced in Congress in 1949. They were to stimulate this investment flow by providing certain guarantees to persons making investments under what came to be known as the Point Four Plan.

The principal bills of this nature were HR 5594 in the House and S 2197 in the Senate. Each measure authorized the Export-Import Bank to underwrite foreign investments against risks that proceeds from them might not be convertible into U. S. dollars. If such conversion problems arose with regard to returns from investments made abroad under the Point Four program, the Bank would be authorized under the legislation to make dollars available to the investors, and convert the latters' returns to U. S. currency.

Both HR 5594 and S 2197 were reported to the House and Senate respectively in 1949, but neither chamber took action on them.

On Jan. 20, 1950, President Truman again requested not only a legislative basis for Point Four as a whole, but also action on investment guarantees. He did this by forwarding a report to Congress by the National Advisory Council, which had already endorsed the idea of guarantees.

Although its 1949 investment guarantee measure (HR 5594) was pending before the House, the lower chamber's Banking and Currency Committee decided to supersede it with another bill. Some dissatisfaction had been registered because HR 5594 set a limit of $800 million on the amount of guarantees the Export-Import Bank could make. It was felt in some circles that this figure was too high.

Accordingly, efforts were started on a different bill, to be placed before the House in 1950 in lieu of the 1949 measure.

HOUSE

Committee

On April 18, Rep. Brent Spence (D Ky.) introduced HR 8083, authorizing the Export-Import Bank to guarantee certain foreign investments against certain risks to the extent of $250 million. The measure was referred to the House Banking and Currency Committee, which was headed by Spence.

No formal hearings on HR 8083 as such were held. Instead, the Committee fell back on testimony given in 1949 on another bill (HR 5594), which was similar to the subsequent measure. The only difference between HR 5594 and HR 8083 was that the latter set a $250 million ceiling on the amount of guarantees the Export-Import Bank could issue, and spelled out the nature of the risks guarantees would be made against. These risks were: 1. the inability of investors to convert their foreign earnings into dollars; and 2. the loss of properties because of expropriation, confiscation or seizure by public authority in the foreign country.

Witnesses favoring HR 5594 in 1949 —and thus the principles carried in HR 8083 in 1950 — were officials from the State and Treasury Departments and the Export-Import Bank itself. At the same time, witnesses who were appearing before the House Foreign Affairs Committee and the Senate Foreign Relations Committee in connection with a legislative basis for the Point Four program (exclusive of its investment guarantee aspects) discussed the guarantees. Many witnesses were in favor of them.

On April 27, the Banking and Currency group favorably reported its measure.

Rules Group Opposition

However, HR 8083 encountered trouble in the House Rules Committee, where the measure's merits were argued. Bill opponents told the Committee that Point Four would build up foreign cheap-labor competition and undermine markets for American-made goods. Supporters said the measure would help curb communism by putting backward countries on their economic feet.

The Rules Committee on May 23 voted 5-4 against sending HR 8083 onto the House floor for action. But after pressure was brought to bear, the group reversed itself on June 13, and cleared the bill.

Debate

The House took up HR 8083 on July 10. Spence led support for the measure, saying. "You cannot make friends by gifts. Gifts often produce nothing but ingratitude. But it seems to me that if we can establish American businesses that will develop the underdeveloped countries of the world if we can establish relations with them, there will be common interest that will encourage friendships that cannot be attained in any other way."

Jesse P. Wolcott (R Mich.) opposed the measure. He told the House, "When and if those foreign countries once go into full production, either through their own efforts or through the efforts of Uncle Sam, when we will have saturated the world markets, then who is going to be the sufferer? The American laboring man and the American standard of living and the American economy, and I might say world peace will suffer."

President's Appeal

The next day, July 11, President Truman made appeals on behalf of the pending measure. In letters to Democratic and Republican leaders, Mr. Truman called Point Four "an essential part" of his program for peace and global development. He said "private foreign investment can make a major and unique contribution to the common objective" and that guarantees for such investments would be helpful.

Final Action

The House then began voting on amendments offered to HR 8083. An amendment introduced by Eugene Cox (D Ga.) was approved requiring treaties or "agreements" between the U. S. and the foreign country involved that provide protection of U. S. nationals against discriminatory and burdensome measures restricting ownership and operation of business enterprises abroad; provide for prompt compensation for losses through expropriation, restrictions, or competition from government enterprises; provide for immediate conversion of profits into dollars and transfer of the dollars out of the foreign country.

Another amendment, by Spence, provided that guarantees could be offered only to businesses which would not present "uneconomic and unsound" duplication of productive facilities already existing in the U. S. and other countries.

The Cox amendment carried on a standing vote 89-10. The Spence amendment was approved by voice vote.

Rep. Jesse Wolcott (R Mich.) then moved to recommit the bill, but his motion was rejected 156-184 on July 12, and the House approved the entire measure by a roll-call vote of 195-151.

This sent the bill across the Capitol to the Senate, but the upper chamber failed to take action on it during 1950.

UN Revision

After prolonged hearings in 1950 on a welter of proposals to alter the United Nations structure to strengthen it or aim it towards eventual federation, a Senate Foreign Relations Subcommittee recommended Sept. 1 that the U. S. continue to support the United Nations as it stood and not attempt to form a new world organization for peace.

The group, headed by Elbert D. Thomas (D Utah), made a report to the full Senate Committee, analyzing several proposals for world organizations other than the UN but recommended that none of them be adopted. Other members of the Subcommittee were Theodore Francis Green (D R.I.), Brien McMahon (D Conn.), Alexander Wiley (R Wis.), and H. Alexander Smith (R N. J.)

The House Foreign Affairs Committee had held hearings in October, 1949 on a half dozen similar proposals for strengthening the UN or building regional or world federations of governments. (See CQ Almanac, Vol. V, p. 388 for text on resolutions made and considered during the 1st Session, 81st Congress). No 1950 report was made by the House group.

Each of the major proposals for UN reform or world federation received strong backing from organized groups at both House and Senate hearings. State Department reaction to proposals was also presented to the Senate Foreign Relations Subcommittee.

In February, the State Department, through two authorized spokesmen, raised a warning against Congressional proposals favoring United States leadership in the creation of world federation or a union of Atlantic powers. It asked the Senate Subcommittee not to approve any resolution that went further than giving renewed support to United Nations machinery as it then existed.

Deputy Undersecretary of State Dean Rusk, one of the Department's witnesses, held that it "would be disastrous, if, by turning in any irresponsible or whimsical fashion to new forms of organizations or glittering formulae for perfection, we were to set ourselves back." He said "satisfactory answers to some very fundamental questions" were first necessary before "bold proposals for a radically new international organization" can be safely considered.

The other government witness was John D. Hickerson, Assistant Undersecretary, who questioned whether the American people were ready to take part in a union scheme that he said would entail abandonment of national control over foreign policy, armed forces, imports, currency, immigration and taxation. Such a union might bring weakness instead of strength, Hickerson said.

Rusk and Hickerson went through the some half dozen resolutions pending before the Subcommittee and expressed opposition to all but the one (S Con Res 72) offered by Sens. Homer Ferguson (R Mich.) and Frank P. Graham (D N.C.), which would, among other things, restrict the veto power in the UN Security Council, strengthen the International Court of Justice with broad powers given to it by UN members, and create a police force capable of keeping world peace. Hickerson said the State Department had studied this proposal in its drafting stage and had offered informal comments to its sponsors.

Proposals

The proposals considered by both House and Senate Committees, together with their proponents and opponents, were as follows:

U. N. Revision Resolution

This was S Con Res 72, the Ferguson-Graham proposal; its backers were:

League of Women Voters
American Association for the United Nations
Committee on National Affairs
American Association of University Women
National Farmers Union
International Ladies Garment Workers Union
New Jersey State Federation of Women's Clubs

H Con Res 5 by Chet Holifield (D Calif.) and H Con Res 15 by Laurie C. Battle (D Ala.) also proposed strengthening the UN through revising the UN Charter.

Article 51 Pact Resolution

S Con Res 52, sponsored by Sens. Paul H. Douglas (D Ill.) and Elbert D Thomas (D Utah), called for revision of the UN Charter to abolish the Security Council veto, and failing that, to set up a lesser bloc within the UN pledged to refer threats of aggression to the General Assembly.

Backers of this proposal included:

American Association for the United Nations, which also strongly supported S Con Res 72.

International Association of Machinists.

William Green, President of the American Federation of Labor, who submitted a statement to the Senate Foreign Relations Subcommittee favoring S Con Res 52.

A representative of the National Society for Constitutional Security testified against the proposal.

World Federation Resolutions

S Con Res 56, introduced by Sen. Charles W. Tobey (R N. H.) and sponsored by 18 other Senators, declared it was a fundamental objective of U. S. foreign policy to support the UN and seek its development into a world federation with limited powers adequate to preserve peace through "enactment, interpretation, and enforcement of world law".

H Con Res 64, introduced by Rep. Brooks Hays (D Ark.) was the same as S Con Res 56. Some 100 Congressmen sponsored similar resolutions, which were subjected to extensive first session hearings before the House Foreign Affairs Committee. (See CQ Almanac Vol. V, p. 388 for other House and Senate sponsors of world federation resolutions.)

Supporting S Con Res 56 was the United World Federalists, formed in 1947. UWF policy adopted in October, 1949, said federalists differ on how much power a world federal government should have at the start, but fully agreed "that we should move as rapidly as possible to a world federal government with authority and power to legislate on basic causes of international friction".

The federalist group backed the UN but said it could not prevent war "as long as it remains a league of sovereign states". World federal government "is an urgent necessity," said UWF, and the U. S. should declare its major foreign policy objective to be transformation of the UN into a world federation.

Other supporters included:

AVC
AMVETS
Friends Committee on National Legislation
National Junior Chamber of Commerce
Liberal Party of New York
National Farmers Union
UAW-CIO
Committee on World Peace of Western North Carolina.
Conference of the Methodist Church,
Workers for World Security of Cleveland, O.

But more than a dozen organizations went on record against proposals smacking of world federation. These groups included:

National Economic Council, Inc.— Devoted an issue of its semi-monthly letter to UWF. America faces a "grave danger" in "schemes for 'world government'," said the letter, by Merwin K. Hart.

Daughters of the American Revolution — Strongly endorsed 1950 action of the Georgia legislature in rescinding its 1946 passage of the Humber resolution favoring world government. A DAR memo on the Georgia action, sent to Congressmen, said the proposed "entanglements" would "subordinate the sovereignty" of the U. S.

American Coalition spokesman, John B. Trevor, told the Senate Subcommittee any form of world federation would inevitably lead to the equalization of wealth, so that the average U. S. citizen would see "his living standard being cut five-sixths" of what it is now.

United Mothers of America, Inc.— Sent Congressmen resolution opposing alleged efforts "to seduce the United States of America to surrender its sovereignty thru 'joining' a World Government under the representation that only a 'World State' can assure an 'enduring' World Peace".

National Society for Constitutional Security said the U. S. would be "committing national suicide" by giving up its sovereignty.

Society of the War of 1812 was put on record against world government by Federic Gilbert Bauer, representing the organization.

The 24th Women's Patriotic Conference on National Defense, of "35 patriotic groups" representing "three million" women in the United States passed a resolution at a Washington, D. Friends of the Public Schools of America — In its monthly bulletin, said the United States would have 150 votes out of 2,000 in a world federation. Participants "must give up all power of resistance and bind themselves to remain forever under that World Government," said the publication.

A resolution by the American Legion said it was "opposed to any form of world federation or government at this time".

Atlantic Union Resolutions

S Con Res 57, introduced by Estes Kefauver (D Tenn.) and sponsored by 19 other Senators, and supported by the Atlantic Union Committee, requested the President to invite North Atlantic Treaty nations to join in a convention to explore the possibilities of a federal union of democracies.

H Con Res 111 and 107, introduced by Clifford Davis (D Tenn.) and Hale Boggs (D La.,) respectively, corresponded to S Con Res 57.

Supporting these proposals were: Federal Union, Inc., the Atlantic Union Committee, Dr. Harold C. Urey, the atomic scientist, and the National Economic Council.

A representative of the National Society for Constitutional Security testified against the resolutions.

Immigration and Naturalization

S 3455

SUMMARY

On July 26, 1947, the Senate passed S Res 137 directing the Senate Judiciary Committee to make a study of the entire immigration and naturalization system. The investigation was continued through March 1, 1950.

The Committee filed a report on the investigation April 20, and on the same day Pat McCarran (D Nev.), chairman of the group, introduced a bulky bill designed to rewrite all laws relating to immigration, naturalization and nationality.

No hearings were held on the 248-page measure. McCarran said the press of war legislation made it impossible for Congress to devote time to such a comprehensive bill. However, the bill showed signs of stirring up an extended controversy when Congress gets to it.

McCarran said the purposes of his bill were to simplify the quota system for admitting immigrants without basically changing the traditional formulas used for selecting them, and to tighten up screening procedures for barring undesirables and subversives.

But Rep. Emanuel Celler (D N.Y.), chairman of the House Judiciary Committee, said that McCarran's bill would virtually cut off immigration into the United States. Celler said that "90 per cent of all quotas are available to categories in which only a handful of immigrants could qualify."

Celler added, "Careful study of the Senator's proposal convinces me that it is aimed not at curtailing, but in fact stopping, all immigration to the United States."

Provisions

The McCarran immigration bill contained the following major provisions:

Title I: General

A new Bureau of Passports and Visas to be set up in the State Department.

Liaison to be authorized between the Commissioner of the Immigration and Naturalization Service, the Director of the Bureau of Passports and Visas, the Federal Bureau of Investigation and the Central Intelligence Agency.

Title II: Immigration

The annual quota of any "quota area" to be one - sixth of one per cent of the number of inhabitants in the continental United States in 1920 attributable by national origin to such quota area. (Substantially the same as present law.)

The following classes of aliens to be added to the excludable list: Homosexuals and sex perverts; persons convicted of two or more crimes, whether involving moral turpitude or not, if the aggregate possible jail sentences exceeded one year; aliens seeking to enter solely or incidentally to engage in an immoral act; aliens entering to work, unless so authorized; aliens seeking to procure a visa by fraud; aliens not possessing proper entry documents; subversive aliens in a class more widely proscribed and defined.

Type of immigrants allowed from any one quota area to be: 30 per cent persons urgently needed in the U. S. because of education, technical training, specialized experience or exceptional ability; 50 per cent who are parents of U. S. citizens 21 years of age or over; 20 per cent who are spouses or children of resident aliens awaiting citizenship.

If these quotas be not used, then up to 10 per cent of each annual quota to be available to other qualified immigrants.

Detention and deportation provisions to be tightened and extended.

Title III: Nationality and Naturalization

New citizens to be able to speak, read and write English and be grounded in the principles and form of our government.

Petitioners for citizenship to undergo a thorough personal investigation.

Dual citizenship to be almost entirely eliminated.

Nominations

O'DWYER CONFIRMED

President Truman's nomination of William O'Dwyer, mayor of New York City, to be Ambassador to Mexico drew more attention in the Senate than any other nomination in the foreign policy field in 1950. The Senate ultimately confirmed O'Dwyer, but took several partisan ballots and heard considerable debate before doing so.

The President nominated O'Dwyer on Aug. 15. Some Republicans contended that the O'Dwyer appointment was made to force a mayoralty election in New York City, so that Democrats could benefit from the heavier vote in November.

Committee

Several protests were registered with the Foreign Relations Committee against confirmation of O'Dwyer and closed hearings were held Sept. 12 and 13 to give the objectors a chance to speak. But only one witness, Henry V. Poor, a Republican seeking to unseat Rep. Franklin D. Roosevelt, Jr. (D-Lib) in New York, appeared to oppose the confirmation. And only one member of the Committee, Sen. Bourke B. Hickenlooper (R Iowa) directed questions at the nominee.

Describing the sessions, Committee Chairman Tom Connally (D Tex.) said most of the charges against O'Dwyer and the questioning he underwent revolved about his conduct as Kings County District Attorney prior to his first election as New York Mayor in 1945.

Incompetence Charged

Poor introduced as evidence a grand jury presentment handed up in December, 1945, that taxed O'Dwyer's office with "negligence, incompetence and flagrant irresponsibility whereby (Albert) Anastasia was permitted to escape prosecution, conviction and punishment for murder and a number of other vicious crimes." Connally said O'Dwyer, in answer to this, "told us that the main prosecution witness died and they couldn't very well bring him back."

Poor also raised against O'Dwyer charges of certain underworld connections, inconsistency, and passing out political plums to associates.

Hickenlooper's questioning, Connally said, also revolved around Poor's charges. The Iowan moved that the Committee get all the grand jury records in the case but this proposal was rejected, according to Connally's account. After hearing O'Dwyer himself, all Committee members except Hickenlooper were "satisfied", he added. Those voting for approval, Connally said, were himself, and Sens. Walter F. George (D Ga.), Millard E. Tydings (D Md.), Theodore F. Green (D R. I.), Brien McMahon (D Conn.), Alexander Wiley (R Wis.), J. William Fulbright (D Ark.) and Henry Cabot Lodge, Jr. (R Mass.).

Clendenin Ryan, Jr., long a political foe of O'Dwyer's, failed to appear against the nominee. He said he objected to closed hearings. Rep. Vito Marcantonio (ALP N. Y.) and Arthur Schutzer, ALP secretary, also critics of the appointment, notified the Committee they would not be able to attend.

On Sept. 13, O'Dwyer's nomination was endorsed by the Senate Committee, by a unanimous 8-0 vote. O'Dwyer's name was included on a list of nominees to be presented to the Senate for confirmation.

Debate

When the upper chamber took up this list on Sept. 15, however, Sen. Bourke Hickenlooper (R. Iowa) objected to immediate consideration of the nomination. He and Sen. Irving Ives (R N.Y.) both asked for postponement of action until Sept. 18.

Action on the O'Dwyer nomination was delayed at their request, and Hickenlooper withdrew his objection to consideration of the matter when it came up the second time.

Taking up the opposition on Sept. 18, Ives told his colleagues that developments in a Brooklyn gambling investigation since O'Dwyer was confirmed in Committee had indicated that "more information" should be obtained before final action was taken. Ives referred to the arrest of 28 members of a Brooklyn gambling ring Sept. 15. "Mr. O'Dwyer," Ives said, "has been quoted as saying that the gambling investigation was a witchhunt." He added O'Dwyer owed it to himself to have these charges disposed of before he became an ambassador.

Ives moved first to delay the decision on the nomination until Sept. 19. This met with defeat on a roll-call vote, 25 to 36. When the Senator then moved to recommit the nomination to the Foreign Relations Committee for further study, he was defeated on another roll call, 24 to 40. (Votes on page 268.)

Sen. Herbert H. Lehman (D N.Y.) warmly supported the former mayor and suggested that a Republican move was afoot to keep putting off the issue until Congress quit later in the week. Ives denied this. Chairman Connally opposed the move to return the appointment to his group. He said the Committee already had investigated O'Dwyer's record and "so far as I know nothing has been proved to his discredit." Sen. Dennis Chavez (D N.M.) also supported O'Dwyer, praising his qualifications for the job.

Final Action

The Senate then took its final ballot on O'Dwyer, and confirmed him by a 42-22 roll-call vote. The final vote to accept O'Dwyer was almost strictly partisan, with no Democrats against him and only four Republicans for him—Wayne Morse (R Ore.), Leverett Saltonstall (R Mass.), Margaret Chase Smith (Maine), and Alexander Wiley (Wis.).

Export - Import Directors

A Senate roll-call vote was also produced by the President's nomination June 16 of the four existing directors of the Export-Import Bank to new five-year terms. The directors were Hawthorne Arey, of Nebraska, Herbert E. Gaston, of New York, Clarence E. Gauss, of Connecticut, and Lynn W. Stambaugh, of North Dakota.

The Senate Banking Committee approved the nominations on June 27. They were taken up in the Senate July 18. Before final action, however, the Senate rejected 50 to 8, a motion by Sen. Wayne Morse (R Ore.) to send the nominations back to the Committee for further consideration.

But Morse did win his fight to lay before the Committee, prior to the final Senate action, what he called "serious allegations" regarding the criteria, the standards and the policies which the Bank applied in granting loans to various nations, particularly Argentina, Brazil and Mexico.

The Committee met in a closed session July 19 to hear Morse, and he later announced he was "perfectly willing" to have the directors confirmed forthwith. He said he had won what he was after when the Committee assured him it would make an inquiry into policies of the bank.

The Senate confirmed the four officials without objection on July 19.

Yugoslav Aid

S 4234—P.L. 897

SUMMARY

President Truman Nov. 29 asked Congress to provide during the short session a sum of $38 million to pay for famine relief in Yugoslavia. He described the step as "clearly in our national interest."

It was the second aid-to-Yugoslavia measure taken by the administration in less than a week. On Nov. 24 the President had notified Congress he was allocating $16 million to provide food for the army of the drought-stricken country under the Mutual Defense Assistance Act.

Senate approval of a Yugoslav aid bill (S 4234) came on Dec. 11 and was voted 60 to 21. The House added its endorsement Dec. 13 by a vote of 225 to 142. (See page 262 for votes.) It was the first major foreign policy showdown of the "lame duck" session. The few restrictions and conditions that were added to the grant met little opposition from supporters of the program.

While the measure finally enacted was the one originated in the Senate, the House actually first passed its own bill, HR 9853. Later it proceeded to pass S 4234 after substituting for its text the terms of the House bill. It then tabled the latter.

Both chambers amended the aid legislation to authorize the transfer of the requested $38 million from existing funds at the disposal of the Economic Cooperation Administration. This made it possible to bypass Congressional committees and make the money immediately available. Otherwise, another separate measure, appropriating the money, would be required. In the Senate this step was sponsored by Pat McCarran (D Nev.) and in the House by Rep. Omar Burleson (D Tex.).

Because the House and Senate versions of Yugoslav aid legislation differed, they were sent to a joint conference committee for harmonization. The conference group reached a compromise Dec. 15. The conference report was passed by the House on Dec. 18 by a voice vote, and by the Senate on Dec. 19 by another voice ballot.

The President signed the measure into law on Dec. 29.

Provisions

The measure, entitled the "Yugoslav Emergency Relief Assistance Act of 1950", carried these authorizations and directives:

1. That the President spend $50 million in previously appropriated ECA funds to aid Yugoslavia. (Because the President had already allocated some $12 million to the country, the net sum of new funds he was permitted to disburse under S 4234 was $38 million.)

2. That the U. S. and Yugoslavia make a formal agreement between themselves spelling out the aid program, and that Yugoslavia advance local currencies to enable the U. S. to meet administrative and operative expenses in carrying out the program.

3. That Yugoslavia "give full and continuous publicity" to the U. S. program, and to permit persons designated by the U. S. "to observe and supervise without restriction" its carrying out.

4. That Yugoslavia match any proceeds from the sale of U. S. Goods under the program with local currencies to be turned over for the aid of Yugoslav children and the needy.

5. That 50 per cent of all goods shipped Yugoslavia be carried in American-flag vessels and that farm products shipped be purchased from the Commodity Credit Corporation under official price support terms.

6. That quarterly reports be made Congress on the operation of the program, which itself would be terminated if Congress passed a concurrent resolution to that effect, or if the President terminated it.

SENATE

Committee

Shortly after the President's proposal to aid Yugoslavia was set before it, the Senate Foreign Relations Committee approved a "draft" of a bill (S 4234) embodying the request. On Dec. 4 and 5, the Senate group held closed hearings on the measure, which was supported by Gen. Omar Bradley, chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, and George W. Perkins, assistant Secretary of State. Their testimony was later repeated to the House Foreign Affairs group.

On Dec. 6, the Senate Committee favorably reported S 4234, after approving an amendment requiring Yugoslavia to set up local counterpart funds for purposes of relief and charitable medical care and other purposes which might be agreed upon.

Floor Action

The Senate promptly began to consider its aid-to-Yugoslavia measure. While Administration forces said final passage was never in doubt in the Senate, they were barely able to beat off a Republican endeavor to tag to the legislation a provision to help Chiang Kai-shek's Chinese Nationalist regime on Formosa. By 38 to 42, they broke an effort by Sen. William F. Knowland (R Calif.) to force to a decision on the Senate floor a rider that would have forbidden the President to give any more food to the Yugoslavs until first he had sent Nationalist China $38 million of the $75 million previously appropriated for Chiang under the MAP program.

Knowland first offered his $38-million-for-China amendment Dec. 11 as a rider to S 4234. Chairman Tom Connally (D Tex.), of the Foreign Relations Committee, objected that the Knowland rider was not germane. The presiding officer, John C. Stennis (D Miss.) sustained Connally. At the time the Senate was operating under a unanimous-consent agreement to vote Dec. 11 on all amendments, but only those germane to the bill. Knowland had offered sharp objection to this agreement, saying he had been unable to be on the Senate floor when it was adopted.

The Californian promptly re-offered his amendment in the form of a motion to recommit the bill with instructions to the Foreign Relations Committee to report it back to the Senate with the China-aid clause. He later amended this to provide simple recommittal of the bill, with instructions to the Committee to report it back "forthwith." Adoption of the motion would have had the effect of sidetracking the unanimous consent agreement and permitting a clear-cut China Nationalist aid vote.

Appealing for adoption of the amended motion, Knowland said it was just as important to help Chiang as it was to aid Tito. He charged the administration had consigned to the "deep freeze" $75 million previously appropriated for the "general area" of China. He recalled that Yugoslavia had shot down American planes but said China had worked with us as an ally.

Connally retorted that the Chinese Nationalists had never lost a battle for lack of equipment and said the United States had aided Chiang to the tune of some two billion dollars. Calling the Knowland proposal "a gesture to Nationalist China", Connally shouted: "What do you want — an all-out war with Red China?"

On the final vote, five Republican votes saved the day for the Administration. They were those of Sens. George D. Aiken (Vt.), Ralph E. Flanders (Vt.), Margaret Chase Smith (Maine), Charles W. Tobey (N. H.) and Alexander Wiley (Wis.).

AMENDMENTS AGREED TO

Brien McMahon (D Conn.) — Provide that nothing in act shall be interpreted as endorsing measures of Yugoslav government suppressive of religious, political and economic liberty. Voice.

Pat McCarran (D Nev.) — Provide for earmarking $50 million from ECA funds, including $12 million already used for Yugoslavia from that source.

Warren G. Magnuson (D Wash.) — Provide that at least 50 per cent of materials shipped by sea shall be via U. S. flag vessels.

McMahon — Require reports every three months on administration of act.

HOUSE

Committee

Hardly had the President's program reached the Capitol before the House Foreign Affairs Committee opened hearings and heard support for the grant expressed by George Perkins, assistant secretary of state for European affairs, and Gen. Omar N. Bradley, chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff.

Gen. Bradley told the Committee it was "important to the West that Tito maintain his resistance to domination from Moscow". He said he thought "from a military point of view . . . this aid to Tito is sound." Under questioning, Bradley said he wasn't sure how much the West could depend on Tito if the chips were down, but that since the Yugoslav leader broke with Stalin, there had been tendency on his part to cooperate.

Perkins said the proposed grant would be in the nature of economic warfare against the Soviet Union. Several members asked why rigid commitments, including a promise to fight on the side of the West, should not be attached to the grant. Perkins replied that the only conditions the Administration wished to attach had already been accepted by Belgrade. These were that the source of the assistance would be given full publicity, that the food would be distributed fairly without discrimination against non-Communists and that the distribution could be freely observed by American officials.

Nov. 30 the Committee heard Agriculture experts estimate that the previous summer's drought had cut Yugoslav food production by from 15 per cent in some areas to 60 and 65 per cent in others. Witnesses were Stanley Andrews, director of the Office of Foreign Agricultural Relations, and John J. Haggerty, Agricultural Attache with the U. S. Embassy at Belgrade.

The House group wrapped the President's proposals into a bill numbered HR 9853, and favorably reported it on Dec. 6. The group attached two amendments, one requiring Yugoslavia to give "full publicity" to the American aid, the other requiring distribution of the relief supplies without discrimination as to race, political or religious belief.

Floor Action

The House took up HR 9853 on Dec. 11, and passage of the measure on Dec. 13 climaxed two days of stormy, bitter debate that cut across party lines. Administration supporters contended the relief expenditure was essential to save the anti-Soviet Tito government from falling to Stalin. Critics argued that Tito is still a Communist and not to be depended upon.

Those supporting the bill on the floor included Reps. James W. Wadsworth (R N.Y.), Howard W. Smith (D Va.) and John McSweeney (D Ohio). Those opposing the bill included Reps. Clarence J. Brown (R Ohio), E. E. Cox (D Ga.), James G. Fulton (R Pa.) and Lawrence H. Smith (R Wis.).

As debate neared an end, some attempts were made unsuccessfully to obtain amendments imposing conditions on the grant. Several that were adopted corresponded closely to those accepted in the Senate.

A motion to recommit was offered by Rep. John M. Vorys (R Ohio). It was defeated by division vote, 76 to 173. Rep. Usher L. Burdick (R N.D.) demanded the rollcall which finally passed the bill, 225 to 142.

AMENDMENTS AGREED TO

Omar Burleson (D Tex.) — Authorize diversion of $50 million in ECA funds for Yugoslav relief, including $12 million already expended there by the agency. Voice.

James G. Fulton (R Pa.) — Require Tito government to express an official position in conformity with "its obligations as a member of the United Nations." Voice.

Walter H. Judd (R Minn.)—Require Yugoslavia to take all necessary steps to prevent recurrence of present food crisis. Division, 106 to 4.

John W. Heselton (R Mass.) and August H. Andresen (R Minn.) — Require all commodities to be purchased from Commodity Credit Corp. at cost to government under farm support program. Voice.

Herbert C. Bonner (D N.C.) — Require at least 50 per cent of commodities shipped to Yugoslavia to go in U. S. vessels. Voice.

Mike Mansfield (D Mont.) — Require State Department to report every three months on the degree of Yugoslavia's compliance with aid terms, including full publicity and the right of U. S. to supervise food distributions. Voice.

A. A. Ribicoff (D Conn.) — State that nothing in relief act may be interpreted as endorsing suppression of religious, political or economic liberty in Yugoslavia.

AMENDMENTS REJECTED

John M. Vorys (R Ohio) — Make grant either a straight loan or grant conditioned on Yugoslav use of ECA counterpart funds in local currency. Division, 43 to 55.

Francis Case (R S.D.) — Put aid on a straight loan basis without an alternative. Division, 80 to 93.

Fulton (R Pa.) — Condition Yugoslav aid on return of Greek children taken in border raids during Greek civil war, on freedom of speech and press, respect for territorial integrity of Austria, Greece and Trieste, a halt to Catholic and other religious persecution and respect for nationals of other countries.

CONFERENCE

The conflicting House and Senate bills on Yugoslav aid were sent to a conference committee, which worked rapidly. On Dec. 15, the conferees reported a compromise version, which included most of the provisions of the original House bill. One of the major House-backed provisions retained by the conference group — although the Senate had not expressly stipulated a similar provision — was that all foodstuffs purchased for the program be bought from the Commodity Credit Corporation at official support prices.

The House took up the conference report on Dec. 18. There was no debate, and the report was approved by a voice vote.

The Senate turned to the measure on Dec. 19. Sen. John L. McClellan (D Ark.) took the floor to denounce the bill as the "height of stupidity" which was "simply an attempt to coddle and appease another Communist dictator." Said McClellan: "This is supposed to be a relief bill. It is, in truth and in fact, a military assistance bill."

McClellan's charges, however, drew no formal opposition from backers of the conference report, which the Senate quickly adopted by a voice vote.

This cleared the legislation to the White House, where President Truman signed it into Public Law 897 on Dec. 29.

International Claims Settlement Act

PROVISIONS

This law calls for a three-man International Claims Commission in the State Department to dispose of claims of Americans and the U. S. government against foreign governments out of lump-sum settlement agreements between the U. S. and the foreign government. Main purpose of the bill is to dispose of claims arising from loss of American property through nationalization in foreign countries, such as Yugoslavia, Czechoslovakia, and Poland. Nationalization claims against former enemy countries — such as Rumania, Hungary, and Bulgaria — do not come under P. L. 455 since they are in the jurisdiction of the War Claims Commission.

The law provides a formula for payment of claims under any claims agreement negotiated, as follows:

Claims of $1,000 or less to be paid in full.

Claims exceeding $1,000, to be paid $1,000 and 25 per cent of the balance.

Remaining funds to be distributed on a pro rata basis against balance due on large claims.

The first claims to be settled under this act will be those against Yugoslavia. An agreement between the U. S. and Yugoslavia, signed July 19, 1948, made available $17 million for settlement of some $40 million in claims. The agreement further provided that claimants, in order to be eligible, must have been U. S. citizens at the time Yugoslavia seized, expropriated, or nationalized their properties. Corporations at least one-fifth American-owned were eligible to file claims.

No termination date was set for the Commission, but it is required to complete its work in connection with Yugoslav claims by March 10, 1954 (four years from the effective date of the act).

SENATE

HR 4406 had been on the Senate calendar since July 28, 1949, when the Foreign Relations Committee reported it. (See CQ Almanac, Vol. V, p. 386 for House action during the first session.) The Senate took up the bill Feb. 14, 1950. Committee amendments were adopted en bloc, and Sen. Theodore Francis Green (D R.I.) obtained unanimous approval for the bill. The only opposition was registered by Andrew Schoeppel (R Kan.) who filed a statement urging further study of the bill.

Amendments recommended by the Committee and adopted by the Senate provided (1) for appointment of Commissioners by the President, with Senate confirmation, instead of by the Secretary of State, (2) for the President, instead of the Secretary of State to fix a termination date for the Commission, (3) deleted the House provision that the Commissioners be members of the bar. The most important amendment provided that claimants under any future claims settlements be citizens at the time those agreements might be concluded. (The Yugoslav agreement had provided that claimants must have been U. S. citizens at the time their property was nationalized.)

CONFERENCE REPORT

Conferees agreed to all Senate amendments except the one relating to citizenship, which was deleted. The report was filed Feb. 27, and the Senate adopted it the same day.

In the House the conference report was opposed by John M. Vorys (R Ohio), who had fought original passage of the bill, and by John Davis Lodge (R Conn.). Lodge favored the Senate citizenship amendment, and urged the House to vote down the conference report so that it might be reinstated. However, the House adopted the conference report, first on a division vote of 88-51, and then on a roll-call vote demanded by Vorys, 209-165. (See p. 262 for vote.) Final action came on March 7, and President Truman signed the bill into law March 10.

Naturalization Of Asians

H J Res 238 — Vetoed

SUMMARY

A disagreement between the President and Congress over desirability of curbs on naturalization privileges killed a resolution (HJ Res 238) which one Representative had described as almost the only civil rights legislation the 81st Congress might enact.

The President Sept. 9, 1950 vetoed the resolution even though he declared he strongly favored its attempt to eliminate the last racial bar to naturalization. He said he objected, however, to a provision to withhold citizenship from aliens with records adjudged subversive before or after their naturalization.

Describing this so-called subversives section as "vague and ill-defined," the President said he could not approve a measure which "has these deficencies".

The House Sept. 14, 1950, voted to override the veto, 307 to 14. (See Page 262.) The Senate did not take up the veto, and thus permitted it to kill the resolution.

As drawn originally, the resolution would have amended the Nationality Act of 1940 to provide that the right to naturalization should not be denied because of race.

It was described on the House floor as making eligible for citizenship almost 85,000 Japanese, admitted for permanent residence before passage of the Exclusion Act of 1924, 3,139 Koreans and 145 other Asians—mostly Burmese, Indonesians, Samoans, Polynesians and Siamese.

Earlier amendments to the Nationality Act extended citizenship privileges to other Asians who were permanent residents.

Provisions

The ultimately vetoed resolution, to grant citizenship privileges to some Asians residing in the United States and setting up barriers to citizenship for subversives, contained two major sections, both to amend the Nationality Act of 1940. The two sections would have:

1. Eliminated race as a bar to naturalization.

2. Denied naturalization to anyone who, within 10 years preceding the naturalization proceedings, had belonged to any totalitarian party, and provided for the cancellation of citizenship of anyone joining such an organization within five years after naturalization. The section also provided that a naturalized citizen could withdraw from any organization and retain citizenship by doing so within three months after the Federal government posted the group as subversive.

BACKGROUND

H J Res 238 that in effect would grant naturalization rights to American residents of Asian origin was introduced May 9, 1949, by Rep. Francis E. Walter (D Pa.)

The resolution would have permitted approximately 85,000 Japanese, 3,000 Koreans and a few Asians from other countries who have lived in the United States or in Hawaii for 25 years or more to become citizens. Congress in 1943 extended naturalization privileges to the Chinese, and in 1946 granted them to residents who came from the Philippines and India.

The resolution was reported from the Judiciary Committee May 19, 1949, and was passed by the House June 6, 1949, without debate. On Oct. 13, 1949, the Senate Judiciary Committee reported the bill and it was on the Senate calendar at the close of the first session of the 81st Congress.

SENATE

The Senate took up HJ Res 238 on June 8, 1950. Sen. Richard B. Russell (D Ga.) proposed an amendment that he said was intended to limit provisions of the measure to Japanese. He said the bill as presented "was so broad that I felt it would permit a great many other aliens, including those who were here by virtue of treaties, to be included under its terms".

Chairman Pat McCarran of the Judiciary Committee supported the amendment, and said it accomplished what the Committee thought to be the intent of the measure.

Restricting the application of the resolution exclusively to Japanese persons and persons of Japanese descent who entered the United States (including the Territory of Hawaii) prior to July 1, 1924, the amendment was then accepted, and the Senate passed the resolution by a voice vote.

CONFERENCE

The House June 15, 1950, asked for a conference with the Senate on HJ Res 238. The conference report, filed Aug. 14, 1950, revised slightly and restored the House language—that the right to naturalization "shall not be denied or abridged because of race"—but added a long section also amending the Nationality Act of 1940.

"Subversives" Section Added

This would have barred from citizenship anyone who in the past 10 years had belonged to an organization advocating any form of totalitarianism. It also could have deprived of citizenship anyone who within five years after naturalization became affiliated with such an organization.

The House agreed to the conference report Aug. 14, 1950. After the House had accepted the report, Rep. Walter H. Judd (R Minn.) said the original version of the resolution was the first section of a bill he had introduced (HR 199) and which was awaiting final Congressional action. He said his bill would remove racial discrimination from both naturalization and immigration laws and establish quotas for 12 remaining excluded areas of the world. (CQ Almanac, 1949, P. 387.)

H J Res 238, he said, would make possible citizenship applications by almost 85,000 Japanese, 3,139 Koreans and 145 other Asians—mostly Burmese, Indonesians, Samoans, Polynesians and Siamese—admitted for permanent residence prior to passage of the Oriental Exclusion Act of 1924.

Final Senate approval of the conference report on the resolution came on Aug. 28, 1950, when Sen. Scott W. Lucas (D Ill.) withdrew a motion to reconsider an earlier Aug. 14 vote which had already tentatively approved the report.

VETO

Declaring the language in one section of the measure was "vague and ill-defined," President Truman Sept. 10, 1950, vetoed HJ Res 238. His criticism was directed at the section on Communist front groups—"no one can tell what it may mean or how it may be applied".

"The result," he added, "might be to weaken our naturalization laws rather than strengthen them. The result might also be to jeopardize the basic rights of our naturalized citizens and other persons legitimately admitted to the United States.

"In my judgment, it would be impossible to administer this act without creating a twilight species of second class citizens, persons who could be deprived of citizenship on technical grounds, through their ignorance or lack of judgment."

In his message returning the measure to the House, the President asked Congress to re-enact the section granting naturalization privileges regardless of race.

House Overrides

The House Sept. 14, 1950, took up President Truman's veto.

Rep. Francis E. Walter (D Pa.), sponsor of the original measure which did not include the ban on those with records adjudged subversive in the past or future, said that he believed not joining a totalitarian group was "a very, very small price for a person to pay" for becoming a citizen. He added that the resolution contained safeguards to protect innocent members of proscribed organizations.

The resolution was criticized by Rep.

Emanuel Celler (D N.Y.) who said it was "suckled by fear and nursed by hysteria". Rep. Walter H. Judd (R Minn.) said it would be "about the only piece of civil rights legislation that is going to be passed by this Congress" and said he regretted that the Senate had revised the original resolution.

The vote, on the question of passing the resolution despite the President's disapproval, was 307 to 14. This was 93 more than the two thirds required to override a veto.

No Senate Action

The Senate Sept. 23, 1950, considered but took no action on President Truman's veto.

Sen. Pat McCarran (D Nev.) said the provisions to which the President objected—denying citizenship to aliens adjudged to have subversive records—already had been made law in the Internal Security Act of 1950, passed over another Presidential veto. (See page 390).

McCarran suggested that the best procedure would be "to bring in a bill having to do solely with the matter of citizenship of the Asiatics involved". He said that if such a measure "is not promptly introduced by the sponsors of H J Res 238, it will be my purpose to introduce it."

2nd Asian Alien Bill

H. R. 9760

A new measure (HR 9780) to open the way for a naturalization of orientals living in the United States was introduced Nov. 27, 1950, after a similar measure was vetoed by the President. (See page 240.)

Rep. Francis E. Walter (D Pa.), who had introduced the original measure in 1949, also wrote HR 9780. This one omitted the provision — a ban on citizenship to ex-members of subversive organizations — to which Mr. Truman had objected. The bill was in the form of an amendment to the Nationality Act of 1940. An estimated 80,000 elderly Asians residing in this country would become eligible for citizenship under the bill.

The House Judiciary Committee reported the measure Nov. 30. The bill passed the House by voice vote on Dec. 7 and was reported by the Senate Judiciary Committee Dec. 14. The Senate itself failed to act, however.

Kem Resolution

S Res 371

Following the historic Truman-Attlee talks in Washington during December, Sen. James P. Kem (R Mo.) framed a resolution (S Res 371) calling upon the President to give Congress a detailed accounting of them.

As Kem explained his resolution, "it merely asks for a full and complete report of what was done at the recent conference between Mr. Attlee and Mr. Truman, and it asks that any agreements entered into at the conference should, under the Constitution, be embodied in a treaty which should be submitted to the Senate for ratification or rejection."

Lack of Confidence

However, the resolution followed hard on the heels of meetings by Senate and House Republicans at which they expressed a lack of confidence in the policies of Secretary of State Dean Acheson. In this context, Kem's resolution implied further criticism of the Administration's foreign policies.

Kem asked that "the committee be instructed to report the resolution back to the Senate not later than Thursday, December 21, 1950." This brought the charge from Connally that Kem was attempting to dictate to the Foreign Relations group "not only what it should do but when it should to it."

Amendment Defeated

After Connally and Lucas strongly urged the defeat of Kem's amendment to the referral motion, the Senate did so by a 30-45 record vote. Voting against Kem's amendment were three Republicans: Margaret Chase Smith (Maine), Leverett Saltonstall (Mass.) and Chan Gurney (S.D.).

The vote then occurred on Connally's original referral motion, and this was passed on a 47-29 roll-call ballot, with the same three Republicans again joining forces with the favoring Democrats.

Republican Attack

The resolution was widely viewed as an additional Republican attack on the White House and the State Department, and its treatment on the floor of the Senate reflected this.

On Dec. 14, Kem attempted to bring his resolution up for a formal Senate vote — but Majority Leader Scott Lucas (D Ill.) promptly moved to recess the upper chamber. This motion, which precluded action on the Kem proposal, was approved on a strict party-line vote of 37-36. All Democrats present and voting supported Lucas' motion; all Republicans present and voting opposed it.

Appeal For Unity

The Senate returned to the Kem proposal on Dec. 18, and heard Kenneth McKellar (D Tenn.), a long-time critic of many Administration foreign policies, make an appeal for unity and a closing of Senate ranks behind officials charged with the conduct of American foreign affairs in the dire circumstances prevailing.

With action on the Kem resolution the next order of business, Chairman Tom Connally (D Tex.) of the Foreign Relations Committee moved that the measure be referred to his group. Fearing that this unit might pigeonhole his critical resolution, Kem sought to amend Connally's motion.

Kem's resolution was then referred to the Foreign Relations group amid forecasts that it would receive no further action during the remainder of the "lame duck" session.

Maritime Hiring Halls

S 2196

SUMMARY

The union hiring hall method of employing seamen in the maritime industry was endorsed under the terms of this bill reported to the Senate in June, 1950, but never acted upon by the upper chamber.

If the measure had drawn action from Congress, it would have waived the Taft-Hartley law's ban on the closed shop with respect to waterfront hiring halls. The Supreme Court, by refusing in March, 1950, to review the matter, had in effect upheld a lower court's decision that the Taft-Hartley law did outlaw hiring halls.

Sponsored by Sen. Warren Magnuson (D Wash.) S 2196 received lengthy hearings before a Senate Labor and Public Welfare subcommittee. A companion bill (HR 5008) had also received hearings in 1949 before the House Education and Labor Committee (see CQ Almanac, Vol V, page 461) but failed to receive action either at that time or in 1950.

The hiring hall system, which would have been legalized by the proposed legislation, provides that ship companies must call on the union for seamen. The union posts job notices in its hiring hall and men, union and non-union, are signed out on a rotating basis.

BACKGROUND

Hiring hall practices went into effect in 1937 after some 15 years of union struggle to protect seamen from "crimp - joint" employment agencies. Claiming that 1947 amendments (The Taft-Hartley law) to the National Labor Relations Act, prohibiting employers from hiring practices that discriminate on the basis of membership or nonmembership in unions, outlawed hiring halls, steamship operators refused to continue preferential hiring when new collective bargaining agreements were being negotiated in the Spring of 1948.

After negotiations ended in stalemate, the National Maritime Union authorized a strike. The companies filed charges of unfair labor practices against the union. The President appointed a fact-finding board and an injunction was issued continuing the status quo for 80 days. By that time, the union had negotiated agreements to continue the hiring halls with various companies. However, following a National Labor Relations Board decision that hiring halls discriminate unlawfully against nonmembers of the union, a cease and desist order was issued.

Court Upholds Ban

This order was upheld by the Circuit Court of Appeals in New York in a decision by Judge Jerome Frank which stated significantly that "if our interpretation of the Supreme Court is sound, then respondents, who deem the statute harmful, must pursue the constitutional democratic process of either persuading the present Congress or electing new Senators and Congressmen who agree with them."

In 1949, S 2196 and HR 5008 were introduced authorizing a new subsection (c) to be added to section 14 of the National Labor Relations Act as amended. The new subsection would make it legal (not an "unfair labor practice") to use in collective bargaining agreements "any hiring or employment practices prevailing in the maritime industry prior to June 15, 1947."

A hearing was held in 1949 on HR 5008, (see CQ Almanac, Vol. V, page 461) but it was never reported. Nor did S 2196 receive action that year.

1950 Attention Pledged

"Prompt attention" would be given the situation created by the U. S. Supreme Court's ban on the maritime industry's hiring hall system, Chairman James E. Murray (D Mont.), of the Labor and Public Welfare Committee, promised Feb. 13, 1950. Murray, chairman of a Labor Study Subcommittee, said the hiring hall system had "worked satisfactorily" and he expressed fear its abandonment "could lead to a lot of trouble and strife." But he conceded it would be "very difficult" to get action on S 2196 to legalize hiring halls. In his opinion, said Murray, the legislation probably "would have to be considered in a wider program of Taft-Hartley repeal." Senate leaders, however, discounted possibility of T-H repeal in 1950.

Hoyt S. Haddock, legislative representative of the National Maritime Union-CIO, predicted that a determined drive would be made nevertheless for passage of either S 2196 or HR 5008, by Rep. John Lesinski (D Mich.), which would accomplish the same purpose.

Sen. Robert A. Taft (R Ohio), in a statement Feb. 20 contended he was unopposed to union hiring halls if they let in non-union members. He said: "It looks as though the unions are trying to use this thing to kill the whole closed shop proposition. I don't see how we can do it for the maritime unions unless we do it for all."

Later, on Feb. 28, Murray reiterated his belief that the hiring system should be legalized "to prevent chaotic conditions" in the maritime industry.

SENATE

Hearings

A Senate Labor and Public Welfare Committee group headed by Sen. James Murray (D Mont.) opened hearings on March 13 on S 2196 and also general hiring-hall employment practices in the maritime industry.

In a brief preface to the initial hearing, Murray cited a Feb. 13 refusal by the Supreme Court to review a lower court's ruling that the hiring hall system did give preference to union members and thus violated the Taft-Hartley law's ban on preferential hiring. Murray said that "if enforcement of this (Court ruling) means strife in the industry, and this is probable, it seems to me that this subcommittee and the Congress should act to prevent it."

Sen. Warren Magnuson (D Wash.), sponsor of S 2196, was the first witness before the Murray group. He defended the hiring hall system. Endorsement also came when the Pacific Maritime Association, which includes shoreside as well as ship operating employers, filed a statement supporting some type of hiring hall as a necessity for efficient ship operation.

Labor Testimony

Joseph Curran, president of the CIO National Maritime Union, reminded the Committee the union was not asking a law to require the hiring hall but only for permission to operate a hall where it was negotiated in collective bargaining. He testified "there is no better way of stabilizing labor in the maritime industry than through rotary hiring halls policed by the union seamen themselves."

Andrew MacDonald, general chairman of the AFL Radio Officers Union, said March 14 the ban on hiring halls "will put our union out of business." MacDonald was backed up by W. J. Van Buren, secretary-treasurer of the National Organization of Masters Mates and Pilots of America, and H. L. Daggett, president of the CIO-National Marine Engineers' Beneficial Association.

William Glazier, Washington representative of the CIO Longshoremen's and Warehousemen's Union, told the subcommittee March 16 that abandonment of the hiring hall arrangement would "bring chaos" to the West Coast maritime industry. He pointed out that his union, headed by Harry Bridges, recently reached an agreement with the Pacific Maritime Association providing for hiring halls jointly operated by the union and employers. "The longshoremen will never return to the waterfront jungle that prevailed before (the strike of) 1934 and still exists in some ports of the United States," Glazier declared.

Management Testimony

The subcommittee also received a telegram from the Alaska Steamship Company favoring S 2196.

Capt. L. M. Jonassen, president of the Cleveland Tankers Inc., testified that his company had a contract with the National Maritime Union — CIO and that the hiring hall provision in the contract was "most unsatisfactory." He claimed hiring halls perpetuate "incompetency," and he asserted "a union seaman in good standing regardless of ability can bar the best sailor in the world from the job merely because the latter has exercised his American right of choosing to join another union or none at all."

D. A. Wright, president of the Lake Tankers Corp. filed a statement saying his experience had been similar to Capt. Jonassen's. Thomas B. Mann, vice president of the Great Lakes Transport Corp., testified similarly, explaining that before the hiring hall came into use in 1939, replacements of seamen on a vessel would be about 12 a year. Now, he added, replacements on one vessel totaled 56 in the unlicensed crew in a single year.

Taft Comment

Sen. Robert A. Taft (R Ohio), a subcommittee member, said March 21 while questioning Harry Lundeberg, president of the Seafarers International Union — AFL, that he did not think the Taft-Hartley law was intended to abolish the hiring hall. He agreed, however, that the law was not clear on that point and needed some amendment. Lundeberg had declared the hiring hall cannot be taken away from the seamen. "Take it out of the contract, we'll still have it," he predicted. In answer to questions, Lundeberg conceded the closed shop was the intent of the seniority preferential hiring clause in his organization's Pacific coast contract. "It just happens every man with seniority is a union man," he said.

In a letter to the subcommittee March 21, Cyrus S. Ching, director of the Federal Mediation Service, predicted the final outlawing of the hiring halls would result in widespread seamen's strikes. Ching said the seafaring unions, as well as most employers in the maritime industry, want the hiring halls retained.

George W. Morgan, president of the Association of American Ship Owners, called the proposed legislation "vague and indefinite." While stating he favored legislation to clarify the hiring hall situation, Morgan opposed the Magnuson bill on the grounds it "would apparently not only render largely ineffective the Labor Management Act, but would even contravene the policy established under the Wagner Act as well."

Hearings concluded

Bringing the hearings to an end on March 28, the Murray subcommittee heard Hoyt Haddock, executive secretary of the National Maritime Union — CIO, urge changes in the Taft-Hartley law to permit operation of the halls. "The seamen are not going to give (them) up," he declared. Sen. Glen H. Taylor (D Idaho) also endorsed S 2196 saying its language should make certain that the maritime unions derive security from the measure.

As hearings concluded, Murray stated he believed some solution could be found in the controversial matter. This occurred as the U. S. Supreme Court, by refusing to review a decision of a New York Circuit Court, March 27 upheld a ban on the hiring halls as a violation of the Taft-Hartley law. The Supreme Court Feb. 13 previously had denied appeal of the lower court's decision.

(For a recapitulation of lobby stands, see page 274.)

Committee

The Murray subcommittee voted 5-2 on April 28 to recommend S 2196 favorably to the full Committee.

Approving the bill were James E. Murray (D Mont.), Matthew M. Neely (D W. Va.), Hubert H. Humphrey (D Minn.), Claude Pepper (D Fla.), and Wayne L. Morse (R Ore.). Two other Republicans, Robert A. Taft (R Ohio) and Forrest C. Donnell (R Mo.) dissented.

The full Senate Labor and Public Welfare Committee voted, 8 to 3, on May 26 to report to the Senate a bill (S 2196) legalizing the preferential hiring halls used to obtain ships' crews in the maritime industry.

Before accepting the bill, the Committee overrode a substitute offered by Sen. Robert A. Taft (R Ohio), one of the Taft-Hartley authors. Taft proposed writing into the law a provision for preferential union hiring based on seniority. This was the principle advocated during the hearings by Harry Lundeberg, president of the Seafarers International Union-AFL, and generally referred to as the "Lundeberg formula."

Committee Chairman Elbert D. Thomas (D Utah) said all those voting for the bill were Democrats and those against were Republicans. They were, for: Thomas, James E. Murray (Mont.), Claude Pepper (Fla.), Lister Hill (Ala.), Matthew M. Neely (W.Va.), Paul H. Douglas (Ill.), Hubert H. Humphrey (Minn.) and Garrett L. Withers (Ky.). Those against were: Taft, Forrest C. Donnell (Mo.) and H. Alexander Smith (N.J.).

The measure was formally reported June 12.

Report

The Senate Labor and Public Welfare Committee June 18 submitted a written indorsement of the union hiring hall method of employing seamen in the maritime industry. The indorsement was contained in a majority report urging the Senate to adopt S 2196 waiving the Taft-Hartley law's ban on the closed shop insofar as it has been interpreted by the U. S. Supreme Court to outlaw the hiring halls.

Sen. Robert A. Taft (R Ohio) disclosed his disagreement with his view in a dissent accompanying the report. He asserted he believed the union hiring halls were "wholly consistent" with the Taft-Hartley law's union shop provisions. He opposed any waiving of the closed shop ban to accommodate the system, however. He revealed he was willing to go along to some extent with a new hiring hall law, saying he would not object to allowing the maritime industry to hire employees on a seniority basis.

Although set before the Senate, S 2196 failed to draw action during the remainder of the 81st Congress.

Equal Pay for Equal Work

S 706

SUMMARY

Passage of S 706 would have made it unlawful for any employer of eight or more persons to pay his female employees less than he paid his male employees for comparable work requiring comparable skills. The 81st Congress never acted on the measure, however.

Hearings were held in 1950 on this so-called "equal pay for equal work" legislation before a House Education and Labor subcommittee. Numerous officials of federal agencies and interested groups testified, most of them in favor of the legislation. In the Senate the legislation was considered by the Labor and Public Welfare Committee.

The Senate group favorably reported its version of the proposal (S 706) on Aug. 9. The upper chamber never acted on it. In the House, the Education and Labor group never reported its bill.

Provisions

As set before the Senate, the "Women's Equal Pay Act of 1950" (S 706) provided that:

1. Congress shall proceed "to correct, and as rapidly as possible, to eliminate discriminatory wage practices against women based on sex" by exercising Congress' right to intervene in matters of interstate commerce.

2. Paying women less than men for comparable work requiring comparable skills shall constitute "an unfair wage practice." Wage differences based on seniority or merit increase systems that do not discriminate on the basis of sex were exempted.

3. Persons filing charges that unfair wage practices exist in their shops shall not be laid off, fired or discriminated against for this action.

4. The Secretary of Labor shall administer the new law, and report annually to the Congress on its operation. The Secretary shall be empowered to investigate grievances, conduct hearings, issue subpoenas and pay witness fees. Employers shall keep appropriate records, which the Secretary shall prescribe.

5. If, as a result of hearings, the Secretary finds that an unfair wage practice exists, he shall issue an order to the employer to desist and may petition the proper circuit or district court for enforcement. If he finds that no unfair practice exists he shall issue an order dismissing the complaint. Appeals may be made to the proper circuit court for review of the Secretary's orders.

6. Any person convicted of willful interference with administration of the act, willful failure to keep or produce the proper records, or falsification of records, may be fined not more than $5,000 or imprisoned for not more than one year, or both.

SENATE

Committee

The Senate Labor and Public Welfare Committee held no hearings on S 706. Instead, the group studied testimony given the House Education and Labor subcommittee considering a similar bill. Also, the Senate group fell back upon testimony heard on comparable legislation in previous Congresses.

The Senate Committee voted 8-4 on July 13 to approve S 706, after making an addition to the original draft introduced by Sen. Claude Pepper (D Fla.). The addition provided that the Secretary of Labor seek informal correction of any discrimination before resorting to the bill's enforcement provisions.

Voting against the measure were Sens. Lister Hill (D Ala.), Robert A. Taft (R Ohio), Forrest C. Donnell (R Mo.) and H. Alexander Smith (R N.J.).

The measure was formally reported on Aug. 9.

Report

Sen. Pepper wrote the Committee's majority report with respect to S 706, but Sens. Taft, Smith and Donnell each issued "individual views."

For the majority, Sen. Pepper said that "widespread discriminatory wage practices against women" on the basis of sex are evils that "can be remedied effectively . . . only by Federal legislation. Enactment of S 706 will accomplish this objective."

Pepper asserted discrimination "is continuing and insidious in character, constantly undermining our economy wherever it prevails." He noted, however, that fears had been expressed about "the potential cost to industry of an equal-pay policy in law." But since this policy was "endorsed by large segments of management," Pepper said, "it may be assumed that serious difficulties will not be encountered." In fact, greater purchasing power of consumers would result from the elimination of wage discrimination.

Taft Views

In his "individual views", Sen. Taft complained S 706 would "set up another Nation-wide Federal bureaucracy (costing) many millions of dollars annually . . . a large force of inspectors would be necessary to make wage inspections . . . the bill would put American industry to tremendous expense in additional record keeping."

Taft called the bill a "blank check" for federal regulation of a type that is "usually inefficient, unjust and tyrannic." Employers might be faced with "large, retroactive liabilities." He said he saw no reason "to bring into effect the dangerous and arbitrary powers of a Federal dictator."

Concluding that S 706 "might seriously deter the progress which is being made" toward elimination of wage discrimination, Taft called for rejection of a bill that "injects the Federal Government into a tremendous bureaucratic job with complete disregard of justice . . . "

Smith Views

In his views, Sen. Smith said he concurred largely with Sen. Taft, and that governmental intervention in the problem "is completely unjustified and would only multiply the army of bureaucrats . . ." Said Mr. Smith: "If the gap between principle and practice in this matter is so great as to involve substantial injustice and economic loss, it seems to me that the most desirable approach by the Federal Government would be through research, education and persuasion."

Donnell Views

Sen. Donnell complained that no hearings had been held on the bill in 1950, and urged that "the committee make further study . . . " He said the list of persons testifying in earlier Congresses on like legislation "apparently does not include any employer representing management (or) members of the management group." Donnell indicated most of the previous witnesses had come from labor or consumer organizations.

HOUSE

Committee

A subcommittee of the House Education and Labor Committee opened hearings on May 17 on two measures providing equal pay for equal work by women. The bills were HR 1584 by Rep. Helen Gahagan Douglas (D Calif.) and HR 2438 by Rep. Chase Going Woodhouse (D Conn.). Rep. Augustine B. Kelley (D Pa.) was chairman of the group.

An initial witness was Joseph A. Beirne, president of the Communications Workers of America, who told the group that differentials of more than $30 a week existed in the telephone industry between maximum pay for men and women on virtually the same job.

Beirne specifically cited the case of the Chesapeake and Potomac Telephone Co., in Baltimore, which he said paid a maximum of $90 a week to men and $59 to women on a job dealing with complaints of customers and arranging for additional services on request.

Helen Blanchard, testifying for both the Amalgamated Clothing Workers and the Congress of Industrial Organizations, said that 12 states and Alaska had an equal pay law and found it workable.

On May 18, the National Association of Manufacturers went on record favoring equal pay "not only as a matter of policy but as practice." The NAM, however, opposed the provisions of the bills which made equal pay for equal work mandatory.

Following the NAM came strong support for the bills from the Young Women's Christian Association, the National Consumers League, the League of Women Voters, the National Council of Jewish Women and the National Women's Trade Union League.

The next day, May 19, Secretary of Labor Maurice J. Tobin and Frieda S. Miller, head of the Department's Women's Bureau, both supported the legislation. On May 20, however, the Chamber of Commerce in a letter to Rep. Kelley said it opposed achievement of equal pay for equal work by statute, and preferred that the question be handled on a voluntary basis.

The Kelley subcommittee ultimately approved HR 1584 on Aug. 29. But the full Education and Labor Committee never reported the bill to the House for action.

Coal Strike

SUMMARY

A long-drawn-out contract dispute between soft coal mine operators and the miners, represented by the United Mine Workers, awakened loud — and numerous — echoes on Capitol Hill throughout the first half of the 81st Congress' second session.

Six bills were introduced, two of them proposed by President Truman, to deal in one way or another with the coal stoppage which finally climaxed the dispute. None was ever enacted. The House Education and Labor and the Senate Labor and Public Welfare Committees did hold hearings on some of the measures, but none was sent to the House or Senate.

The strike was settled March 6, 1950, and the clamor for action subsided to a murmur, to be aroused only once again in the session. This occurred when a House Labor Subcommittee, headed by Andrew Jacobs (D Ind.), tried to subpoena UMW

Chief John L. Lewis for testimony in connection with his conduct of the strike. The late John Lesinski (D Mich.), who was then chairman of the Labor Committee, revoked Jacobs' subpoena power. Jacobs, nevertheless, held his proposed hearing, but he was able only to "invite" Lewis to appear, and Lewis, as anticipated, declined. The entire matter was then dropped for the session.

BACKGROUND

The dispute between soft coal miners and the operators began June 30, 1949, while the first session was still in progress. At that time, the union contract with the operators ran out, with no prospect in sight of its being succeeded by a new one satisfactory to both sides. The miners, who previously under such circumstances had resorted to the practice of "no contract, no work," chose a new tactic and went on a three-day work week. Negotiations for a new contract were initiated but, though they continued month after month, they failed to produce agreement. The slowdown was still in effect when the second session was reconvened in Jan., 1950.

Major issues in the contract dispute were:

Wages: The UMW wanted a 95-cent-a-day wage increase. Miners under the old contract got $14.05 a day. The union contended the increase could be paid out of then-current profits. The industry countered, saying it would mean much higher retail coal prices.

Welfare Benefits: The union wanted producers' payments to the union welfare and retirement fund increased from 20 cents a ton on all coal mined to 35 cents. The union argued the 20-cent levy did not raise enough money to pension its maimed or aged. The operators said they paid in more than any other basic industry and that much of the money was wasted.

Work Clause: Lewis wanted a clause specifying that miners must work only when "willing and able",—this, he said, was to promote union security and to "stabilize" coal production, which since the war has frequently been in excess of demand. The industry contended such a clause gave Lewis control over production by arming him with arbitrary power to shut down the mines.

On Jan. 3, 1950, when the second session got under way, proposals were offered to provide new legal tools to deal with Lewis and the UMW's three-day work week.

President Truman, at the same time, was urged repeatedly to invoke the Taft-Hartley Act's emergency injunction provisions dealing with strikes that affect national welfare. Similar appeals were directed to Robert L. Denham, general counsel of the National Labor Relations Board, whose office was given autonomous standing by the Taft-Hartley law. While the President took no action for most of the first month of the session, Denham responded with a court suit against the UMW, charging unfair labor practices. Mr. Truman's early position was that the partial strike, called by Lewis in support of his contract demands, had not created a national emergency sufficient to warrant use of the Taft-Hartley injunction proviso.

CONGRESSIONAL ACTION

One of the first moves on Capitol Hill came from seven Republicans who Jan. 11 introduced a resolution (S Con Res 68) calling on the President—but not requiring him—to restore full coal production via Taft-Hartley. Needing approval of both the Senate and House, the resolution never got out of the Senate Labor and Public Welfare Committee, which tabled it Jan. 27 by a vote of 6 to 5 after several hearings. Sen. Harry Flood Byrd (D Va.) Jan. 30 offered a new resolution (S Res 221) but asked that it lie on the table, a maneuver to keep it from going to committee and to permit it to be called up at any time by majority vote. But the resolution was never acted upon.

The Committee's vote on S Con Res 68 was taken on a motion by Sen. Hubert H. Humphrey (D Minn.). He said he favored deferment of the measure because "negotiations are under way" to settle the coal dispute. He referred to a resumption of contract talks which that day had been agreed upon by the operators and the UMW. (For further reference to these talks, see below.)

Sponsors of the resolution, all Republicans, were: Sens. Homer Ferguson (Mich.), Robert A. Taft (Ohio), Alexander Wiley (Wis.), Forrest C. Donnell (Mo.) William E. Jenner (Ind.), Edward Martin (Pa.), and Bourke B. Hickenlooper (Iowa).

Rep. Ralph E. Church (R Ill.), who died later in the session (see page 20), introduced a similar measure (H Con Res 157) in the House Jan. 12, but it was never acted on by the House Education and Labor Committee.

Report Issued

Another early move came from the Senate Banking and Currency Committee which Jan. 10 issued a unanimously-approved report on its mid-1949 investigation of the coal industry, in which it asked the Senate Judiciary Committee to study the findings with a view to determining whether or not anti-trust laws should be applied to labor unions. Sharply critical of the 3-day work week, the Committee said the way the anti-trust laws stood, unions were free to upset the banking and credit structure of the country, control production and prices and drive out small business. Sen. Ferguson said he hoped the Judiciary Committee, of which he is a member, would hold hearings at once, but it was Feb. 16 before the Committee got around to it. By that time, the miners had shut down the mines completely, having begun an all-out strike Feb. 6, 1950. The Judiciary Committee then held hearings on a bill (S 2912) by Sen. A. Willis Robertson (D Va.) which would have subjected labor unions to civil and criminal action under the Sherman and Clayton Anti-Trust Acts if they were found to exercise unreasonable restraint on a basic industry. Its primary purpose, Robertson acknowledged, was to deal with the mine shutdown. However, by the end of some three weeks of hearings the strike was settled, and the Committee never reported the bill. (See page 283, for details of these hearings)

Demands for Action

Individual demands for administration action by the President in the coal dispute were numerous. Sen. Owen Brewster (R Maine) made such an appeal on behalf of the entire Maine delegation. Other demands came from Rep. Andrew Jacobs (D Ind.), Sen. Harry P. Cain (R Wash.), Sen. Guy M. Gillette (D Iowa), Rep. A. Leonard Allen (R Ill.), Sen. Henry C. Dworshak (R Idaho) and Sen. Leverett Saltonstall (R Mass.). Rep. Noah M. Mason (R Ill.) said impeachment action should be brought against President Truman if he did not act to get the mines back to full production. In floor speeches, Sens. John W. Bricker (R Ohio), Edward Martin (R Pa.), Karl E. Mundt (R S.D.), Edward J. Thye (R Minn.), Arthur V. Watkins (R Utah) and Alexander Wiley (R Wis.) all spoke out for Presidential action.

Other Moves

While President Truman continued to ignore demands for action in the dispute, NLRB General Counsel

Denham moved in. On Jan. 18, he filed a petition for a temporary injunction to require the miners to work a normal week pending hearings by the NLRB on charges, brought by the mine owners, that Lewis and the UMW were engaging in unfair labor practices and were attempting to win a new contract by coercion. Denham based his petition on the section of the Taft-Hartley law forbidding any labor practice adjudged to be unfair. He said the UMW — as the operators alleged—was seeking to impose on the operators contract provisions which were illegal. The provisions cited were, in the main, carry-overs from the contract that expired June 30, 1949, including the union shop clause and the clause permitting the miners to work only when they were "able and willing." Sen. Taft was immediately critical of Denham's action, saying the Taft-Hartley "unfair practices" section cited by the NLRB official was never intended to force men back to work when they had no contract and it was not a suitable substitute for the emergency injunction section. A hearing was first set for Jan. 26, then delayed until Feb. 1, on the Denham petition.

Before the hearing could be held, Lewis and the operators agreed to reopen the contract negotiations which had been closed since Oct. 21. The date set was Feb. 1. But after two days the contract talks were again abandoned.

In the meantime, the hearing on Denham's injunction petition was postponed until Feb. 6. This was done to give the UMW opportunity to file a brief in answer to NLRB and management charges.

President Intervenes

But while this was going on, President Truman decided to intervene in the dispute. On Jan. 31, in an effort to avert what by then appeared to be the impending shutdown of the mines, the President asked the miners and the operators to agree to continue production for 70 days while a fact-finding board reviewed the issues and recommended terms for settlement. The operators agreed. The UMW rejected the idea on the grounds, announced by Lewis, that the arbitration would be by "strangers who know not of the industry nor the human beings who delve in it."

The UMW's striking miners made the next move. They went on strike Feb. 6, and within hours, the President invoked the Taft-Hartley law and appointed an emergency board of inquiry, as provided under the law, to find the facts but not to make recommendations. The Board reported Feb. 11 to the President. It said it had found that neither side had bargained collectively on the essential issues of the dispute. Promptly, Atty. Gen. J. Howard McGrath petitioned for an injunction to stop the strike and to force both parties to bargain in good faith. The order was issued in a matter of minutes by a District of Columbia Federal Court.

The contract negotiations were resumed Feb. 15, but the miners, meanwhile, defied the court order and refused to go back to work, even though Lewis publicly instructed them to do so. On Feb. 20 the Attorney General started proceedings against the UMW, charging it with contempt of court. Nevertheless, the court March 2 found the UMW itself was not in contempt, because Lewis had complied with the injunction and ordered the miners back to the pits.

Congress' Turn Again

On March 3, the President sent a special message to Congress proposing two further actions: 1. Government seizure of the coal mines. 2. Creation of a commission of inquiry to make a study of the coal industry as a basis for new legislation.

In his message, the President noted that negotiations between the operators and the union had been resumed March 2, and he expressed the hope agreement would be reached before it "actually becomes necessary for the government to take possession of the mines."

Only a few hours later, the disputants came to agreement on a new contract, ending the 8-month-old controversy. The contract was signed March 5, giving the miners 70 cents more a day, increasing by 10 cents a ton the operators' payments to the miners' welfare fund, eliminating the "able and willing" clause and substituting a "good faith" clause and referring the controversial union shop issue to counsel.

On March 7, therefore, the President asked Congress to shelve the seizure plan, and in identical letters to Vice President Alben Barkley and House Speaker Sam Rayburn (D Tex.) he proceeded to enlarge upon the idea of the coal commission he wanted instead. He spelled out a nine-member commission, to be composed of two Senators, two Representatives, and five members he himself would name, with one from government and the other four from the public at large.

President Truman said he wanted the commission to recommend solutions for the basic problems of the coal industry.

The proposition received a generally warm welcome on Capitol Hill, though Sen. Taft said he doubted the wisdom of the proposal and, in a lengthy Senate speech March 8, accused the President of mishandling the coal strike from start to finish. He said it had been an attempt to discredit the Taft-Hartley law.

Chairman John Lesinski (D Mich.), of the House Education and Labor Committee, said his group would give early consideration to the requested commission. Similar attention also was promised by Chairman Joseph C. O'Mahoney (D Wyo.), of the Senate Interior and Insular Affairs Committee. The idea was never acted upon in the House. The O'Mahoney committee, however, took up the proposal on July 13 when it opened a study of several resolutions calling for a survey of the coal industry. (For story of this action, see p. 659)

Seizure Bill Abandoned

Here is what had happened to the mine seizure bill before it was abandoned:

Within hours after the UMW was acquitted of contempt of court charges March 2, Sen. Wayne Morse (R Ore.) offered a mine seizure bill (S 3169) on which the Senate Labor and Public Welfare Committee scheduled an immediate hearing March 3. But on that day, the President sent to Capitol Hill his recommendations, one of which permitted seizure of the struck mines.

Morse's bill was replaced by the President's (S 3178), which had a companion bill in the House (HR 7552). Special Saturday sessions were scheduled for March 4 by both House and Senate, while immediate hearings on the plan were prepared by the Labor Committees of the two chambers. Shortly after the hearings were started, settlement of the strike was announced, and the House group adjourned almost at once. The Senate unit, after some discussion of proposed amendments to the bill, did not even attempt a tentative rewrite. The bill was permanently scrapped.

AFTERMATH

One of the major reactions to the strike came from Sen. Harley W. Kilgore (D. W. Va.). On April 10 he proposed a five-member commission to be appointed by the President, to regulate the soft coal industry and fix coal prices at the minehead. His proposal was outlined in a bill (S 3383) to set up:

23 district producers boards to advise the commission and to carry out administrative duties.

A national distributors' board to aid in the regulation of coal distribution.

An office of consumer counsel in the Interior Dept. to give the public a voice in the fixing of prices.

In a statement, Kilgore explained: "There is a great excess of potential producing capacity over potential consumer demand for coal, and this unhealthy situation, if permitted to continue unchecked, might easily lead to disastrous cut-throat practices in the industry. Both labor and management would suffer tremendously under such conditions." The measure was referred to the Senate Interior and Insular Affairs Committee, where it remained through the end of the session.

Lewis Probe

A month later the final echo of the coal strike sounded on Capitol Hill. On May 10, a House Education and Labor Subcommittee, headed by Rep. Andrew Jacobs (D Ind.) announced it would subpoena John L. Lewis, UMW Chief, to answer charges he had used a secret code in February to direct his miners to disobey the federal court's back-to-work order. But Committee Chairman John Lesinski (D Mich.) succeeded in nipping this in the bud when he revoked Jacobs' authority to issue subpoenas.

All this came about after Lloyd H. Sidener, a Canton, Ill., miner and head of the Canton local of the UMW, publicly charged that he was deposed as head of the local and fined $50,000 for leading a back-to-work movement when the government ordered reopening of the mines. Jacobs' subcommittee, which had been engaged in investigating "un-American practices in labor unions," promptly took up the charge and started to act. Lesinski, however, denounced Jacobs' action as high-handed and issued an order dissolving the subcommittee. Jacobs appealed to the full committee. By a 7 to 5 vote, it stayed Lesinski's order and decided to consider Jacobs' appeal. But Lesinski got around this by rescinding his dissolving order and, instead, revoking Jacobs' subpoena authority.

Shorn of this power, Jacobs nevertheless held an "invitational" hearing May 16 and heard the complaints of Sidener and those of another miner, Joseph L. Dickmos, of Library, Pa., who said he was suspended from his union for six months after referring to Lewis as "a dictator."

Lewis also was asked to testify but he declined the invitation. In a letter transmitting his refusal, the UMW leader denied Sidener's charge and added that any "unjust or extreme" action taken against Sidener would be redressed if "he would avail himself of his unqualified right to . . . appeal from action of the local union."

Rail Strikes Ban

S 3463

At the height of the railroad firemen's strike in May, Sen. Forrest C. Donnell (R Mo.) introduced a bill (S 3463) which would amend the Railway Labor Act so that strikes would be prohibited and compulsory arbitration required in the railroad industry. Unions and carriers would be required to submit all disputes on which they could not agree to an arbitration board set up by the President. The decisions of the board would be binding on both parties, though the courts would be allowed to review the question up to 30 days following the issuance of a decision. Persons found guilty of violating the bill's no-strike, no lock-out provisions would be liable to fines ranging from $1,000 to $20,000 and to a maximum jail term of six months.

A special subcommittee of the Senate Labor and Public Welfare Committee was constituted to look into Donnell's proposal. The group opened hearings on it May 8.

The Donnell bill was strongly supported by presidents of two eastern railroads, Gustav Metzman of the New York Central Railroad, and Walter S. Franklin, of the Pennsylvania Railroad. Franklin said that since 1941, rail unions had refused in five out of seven important disputes to accept decisions of a presidential fact-finding board set up under the Railway Labor Act, while the railroads had accepted the recommendations in every case. "In the light of this experience," he declared, "the conclusion is inescapable that the operation of the machinery of the Railway Labor Act. . . has completely broken down."

The railroad officials traced the origins of the strike, which, they related, grew from the firemen's demands that an additional fireman be assigned to diesel locomotives.

J. Carter Fort, vice-president of the Association of American Railroads, declared the threat of a national railroad strike "justifies and demands special treatment" because "in no other industry would a strike have the same immediate and catastrophic effect as in the railroad industry."

"Reluctant" Support

Hearings were temporarily suspended until May 23, when Daniel B. Loomis, a spokesman for the Association of American Railroads, told the Subcommittee the AAR "reluctantly" favored enactment of the bill. This brought the comment from Sen. Herbert H. Lehman (D N.Y.) that the bill might lead to government ownership of the railroads. Terming it "an extremely revolutionary proposal", Lehman said the bill's endorsement by railway management represented a "complete reversal of the attitude" of the industry.

George M. Harrison of the Brotherhood of Railway Clerks June 5 criticized the bill, characterizing it as "conceived in stress and hysteria." He contended it would destroy half a century of efforts to cultivate peaceful labor relations in the railway industry. Fred H. Nemitz, president of the Order of Railway Conductors of America, June 7 said the bill would destroy the Railway Labor Act and morale of railway workers and would end a period of collective bargaining which has been considered a model for industry generally.

Testimony by D. B. Robertson, president of the Brotherhood of Locomotive Firemen and Enginemen, June 8 that the Donnell bill would lead eventually to nationalization of the carriers evoked a sharp difference of opinion between Sens. Donnell and Wayne Morse (R Ore.).

To be fair, Morse said, a government board with authority to settle a railroad wage dispute should also have authority to fix the rates railroads charge. From this it would be but a short step to government operation of the carriers. But Donnell argued that the time when the public speaks most often of the desirability of the government taking over the railroads is during a strike. Stop strikes, he declared, and you reduce the demand for nationalization.

"Insult" Charged

William Green, president of the American Federation of Labor, testified June 12 that the bill was a "gratuitous insult" to American labor. Green said the bill was an attempt "to establish a phase of Russian philosophy into American life." It was unnecessary, he stated, because there were fewer strikes on railroads than in any other industry and most rail strikes are local in nature. He also maintained it was false to assume that "the working men and women of this nation have so little regard for their country and its institutions as ever to permit a situation to arise where the existence of the nation, the maintenance of its institutions and the health and welfare of its citizens are in actual fact imperiled."

Although the President has no specific legal authority to take over the railroads except in time of war to move troops and essential materials, Green told the Subcommittee that the President has "an inherent power" to seize industries where labor disputes imperil the national health, safety or welfare. Donnell, however, maintained that the President's power should be written into law because the public interest is predominant to the interests of either labor or management in strikes that threaten a national emergency.

Sen. Matthew M. Neely (D W. Va.) told the Subcommittee that the "Donnell bill would provide unlimited aid and comfort for every Communist recruiter in the country who seeks recruits in ranks of labor." Chairman Elbert D. Thomas (D Utah) said the right to strike is not "absolute," but reiterated his previous opposition to the Donnell measure.

The Senate Labor Committee concluded its hearings July 3 on S 3463 as Chairman Thomas (D Utah) warned railway labor and management that the American public would not stand for a transportation tie-up in the face of the Korean war. Ten days later, the Committee voted 1-10 against Donnell's bill. Donnell cast the lone vote in its favor.

Disapproval Reaffirmed

By the middle of August, another rail strike loomed, this time involving the Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen and the Order of Railway Conductors. However, the Senate Committee reaffirmed its previous position on Donnell's bill. On Aug. 25, the group adversely reported S 3463 to the Senate, and recommended against its passage. This recommendation was endorsed by a 11-1 vote in Committee, with Donnell again the only member dissenting from the majority.

The vote to report S 3463 unfavorably came after votes on two previous motions in Committee the same day. The first of these was a motion to report the bill favorably. This was rejected 11 to 1. The second was a motion to report the measure without recommendation. This was rejected 10 to 2.

Although Donnell was the lone Senator voting to report the bill favorably, he was joined by H. Alexander Smith (R N. J.) in voting to report the measure without recommendation. Those rejecting the motion to report favorably were Elbert D. Thomas (D Utah), James E. Murray (D Mont.), Claude Pepper (D Fla.), Lister Hill (D Ala.), Matthew M. Neely (D W. Va.), Paul H. Douglas (D Ill.), Hubert H. Humphrey (D Minn.), Herbert H. Lehman (D N.Y.), George D. Aiken (R Vt),. Wayne Morse (R Ore.), and Smith. The same group voted to approve the motion to report unfavorably. The only member of the Committee not taking part in the balloting was Robert A. Taft (R Ohio), who was reported in his home state at the time.

Although reported to the Senate, the legislation did not receive further action in 1950.

Labor Relations Surveys

Headed by Sen. James Murray (D Mont.), a subcommittee of the Senate Labor Committee in 1950 made inquiries into labor-management relations in three industries: textiles, telephones and oil tankers. Matthew M. Neely (D W.Va.), Claude Pepper (D Fla.), Hubert H. Humphrey (D Minn.), Robert A. Taft (R Ohio), Forrest Donnell (R Mo.) and Wayne Morse (R Ore.) were other members of the Murray group.

Textile Inquiry

Two investigators were sent June 1 by the Subcommittee to Morristown, Tenn., to probe charges that state and local authorities were conducting a "reign of terror" against striking rayon workers. The charges were made by the Textile Workers of America-CIO and supported by CIO President Philip Murray. They were denied by officials in Tennessee.

The strike was of TWA Local 1054 against the tirecord mill of the American Enka Corp. Called March 28, the strike was over a demand for a 10-cent-an-hour pay increase plus 10 cents more in other benefits. The alleged violence occurred when National Guardsmen were sent to Morristown along with some state police.

As a result of the report by the investigators, an on-the-spot study of the violence-marked strike at the Enka plant was voted June 13 by the Senate Labor Committee. By a 4-2 ballot, the group decided to send Sens. James Murray (D Mont.) and Hubert Humphrey (D Minn.) to the site to determine whether it had been necessary to send National Guard troops there to quell disorders between strikers and non-strikers.

Voting for the Enka survey were Subcommittee members Murray, Humphrey, Claude Pepper (D Fla.), and Matthew M. Neely (D W. Va.). Opposed were Sens. Robert A. Taft (R Ohio) and Forrest C. Donnell (R Mo.), both of whom said calling out the militia was a function of the Governor, and not within the purview of the Senate.

However, the on-the-spot inquiry ended more than 14 hours after testimony began June 16. The session was conducted by Sens. Murray and Humphrey, and heard testimony from twelve witnesses.

Murray declared he was in agreement with the CIO that the militia was not needed. He added, "Bringing in the National Guard is a favorite pastime" used in breaking unions.

Tennessee Governor Gordon Browning came back at Murray with the charge that the two Senators came to the strike scene as agitators rather than investigators. "I suppose they wanted me to wait until dozens of people got killed," he added. "Any statement that troops were not necessary in that emergency is untrue."

After this preliminary investigation in Tennessee was completed, the scene shifted to Washington. On Aug. 22, the Murray Subcommittee heard officials of the CIO Textile Workers Union assert that workers who struck against the Anchor Rome Mills at Rome, Ga., in 1948 had been "blacklisted" in their hometowns, and could not find work. The strike was broken early in 1949 after local courts came to the "aid" of the company, it was charged.

On Aug. 23, former employees of the Anchor firm testified that non-union workers were sold weapons inside the company's plant, and were instructed to break windows. A union member testified that the windshield of his car was broken by a rifle bullet.

But also on Aug. 23, two company officials, presenting management's side of the strike, said they had purchased pistols after they had been threatened with violence. CIO Textile Union International President Emil Rieve was a witness Aug. 24 explaining the position of his union.

Rieve's testimony concluded the phase of the Murray inquiry that was devoted to the textile industry. The Subcommittee's report, however, was not due to be issued before the 82nd Congress convened in 1951.

In December, however, the Murray group decided to reopen hearings on the textile industry, to study "community resistance" at Anderson, S. C., to unionization of a mill there. On Dec. 7, the Senators decided to subpoena newspaper and radio officials in Anderson.

But the next day the group reversed itself, and canceled the subpoenas, saying the Committee's life would expire (on Dec. 31) before the witnesses could appear.

Telephone Inquiry

On Aug. 10, the Murray Subcommittee opened an investigation into labor-management relations in the Bell telephone system, represented by the American Telephone and Telegraph Co.

Joseph A. Beirne, president of the Communications Workers of America (CIO), told the Subcommittee Aug. 10 that:

1. The 20 Bell companies are tightly controlled by their parent, AT&T.

2. Industry-wide collective bargaining is needed to deal with the companies.

3. The Bell system "is a past master in rigid supervision, the speed-up and other methods for the exploitation of the workers."

Beirne detailed some of his criticisms of Bell labor policy Aug. 14 and 15. He said the Bell system used a "top-heavy" staff of supervisors to maintain the "speed up" and "intimidate" workers. At the same time, Beirne testified, the company did not meet needs of consumers by slashing personnel at Western Electric where telephone equipment is manufactured.

American Telephone and Telegraph, Beirne told Senators, "deliberately provoked" the 1947 telephone strike. AT&T, he added, controlled the labor policy of its subsidiaries — the Bell system — and was out to destroy the union. He blamed labor troubles in the telephone industry on AT&T policies.

Edward J. Moynahan, who said he was speaking for eight independent Bell unions, told the Subcommittee Aug. 16 that he was opposed to nation-wide collective bargaining in the Bell system. Moynahan repeated Beirne's complaints against Bell and AT&T, but said the CWA did not represent a majority of workers and should not be the sole bargaining agent.

Management Witness

Management witnesses appeared before the Murray Subcommittee on Aug. 28, Mark R. Sullivan, president of the Pacific Telephone and Telegraph Co., said with respect to nation-wide collective bargaining, that his company's position was that "administration of personnel is a matter tied to local conditions." He said his firm — not AT&T — had hire and fire power on the West Coast. He said "I am the president of a separate corporation, and I run it as a separate corporation."

The same day, George C. Gephart, vice-president of the Southwestern Bell Telephone Co., testified that "I have heard a lot of things here about bad labor relations, but I want to tell you and show you that our labor relations are good and have been during the 13 years that we have been dealing with the present union. . ."

E. R. McLaughlin, vice-president of the New York Telephone Co., testified Aug. 29. Asked if his "labor relations in New York State where one (telephone) company deals with eight unions constitute a mess?", McLaughlin answered, "No" J. N. Stansbury, vice-president of the Illinois Bell Telephone Co., testified also that the management of his own company—not that of the AT&T—handled collective bargaining processes with the union.

AT&T spokesmen testified Aug. 29 and 30. C. F. Craig, vice-president of the firm, summed up its position by telling the Senators that when he bargained collectively with the union, no other company "delegated any authority to me to bargain" for them.

Tanker Inquiry

The report on this phase of the Subcommittee's inquiry was another one promised for 1951.

The Senate Labor-Management Relations Subcommittee Sept. 25 opened hearings on labor practices in the oil tanker industry and was immediately confronted with the failure of a scheduled witness, William P. Lage, attorney for Cities Service Oil Company, to appear.

Paul Hall, an official of the Seafarers International Union (AFL), was the initial witness. He accused Cities Service of resorting to wire tapping, labor spies and similar tactics to prevent unionization of its tanker crews. He named Lage as the man who engineered much of the anti-union fight.

Also on Sept. 26, Christopher Story, vice-president in charge of the marine operations of the Cities Service Oil Co., testified. After outlining the employment practices of his firm, Story said he had entered into contract with the SIU in good faith. With respect to his firm's labor relations, he said, "I hope that they will improve, and I think that they are improving."

Story said the charges raised against his company by the union "sounded like a Hollywood scenario to me." He said Hall's testimony especially was not entirely supported by facts.

The Murray Subcommittee's report on its findings in connection with the oil tanker industry inquiry was another one deferred to 1951.

Railway Union Shop

SUMMARY

The Senate on Dec. 11, 1950, passed a bill (S 3295) to permit railways and unions to make union shop and payroll check-off agreements. The measure prompted a flurry of record votes as it went through the upper chamber. A number of amendments were tacked onto it, to narrow down the reasons for which union members' pay envelopes could be nicked under the terms of the legislation. Final approval of the bill came on a voice vote, however.

The House Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee had a companion bill (HR 7789) before it in 1950, and favorably reported the measure on Aug. 7. However, the House Rules Committee failed to clear the bill to the floor for action.

Nevertheless, House supporters of the legislation were able to bring up the original Senate bill in its stead, and the Senate measure was passed without change on Jan. 1, 1951, by a 292-52 vote. This cleared the bill to the White House, were President Truman signed it into law on Jan. 10, 1951.

BACKGROUND

The Railway Labor Act of 1926 was designed to restrict domination of railway unions by the railroads. Prior to that time labor organizations had contended that most railway unions were "company unions", headed by men picked from the ranks of management.

After the 1926 Act, the disputes abated. In 1934 Congress approved amendments to the law which restricted further the activities of the companies in union organizations. The new amendments made it unlawful for any carrier to influence employees to join any labor organization or to deduct from the wages of employees any dues or assessments payable to unions.

The unions subsequently complained that although this law effectively stopped company unions, it also outlawed agreements between carriers and unions to provide for a union shop (in which employees are required to join the union after being hired) and for check-off of union dues (the dues are taken from the pay checks of the workers by the company and turned over to the union.)

The Labor Management Relations Act of 1947 (Taft-Hartley law) permitted voluntary union shop and check-off agreements between unions and management, but that act did not apply to railroads and airlines.

So unions petitioned Congress to change the Railway Labor Act to bring it into line with the Taft-Hartley law and permit union shop and check-off agreements. HR 7789 and S 3295 were submitted in answer to these petitions.

SENATE

Committee

S 3295 introduced by Elbert D. Thomas (D Utah) March 23, was referred to the Senate Labor and Public Welfare Committee. The bill provided for union shop agreements and payroll check-offs, provided that such agreements would not require persons to join the union who were not ordinarily allowed to be regular members. The proviso was designed to protect persons, usually Negroes, who were not allowed membership in some unions on equal terms with other members.

Hearings were held on the bill from May 1 through May 23. Representatives of unions, railways and airlines appeared. Included in the testimony received was the following:

Robert Ramspeck, executive vice-president of the Air Transport Association of America, told the Committee that continuation of the existing "somewhat haphazard regulation" of airline labor might lead to strikes. He pointed out the Railway Labor Act was expressly tailored for the railroads and their workers. He asked that the air carriers be put under general labor legislation — i. e., the Taft-Hartley law.

P. J. Neff, president of the Missouri Pacific Railroad, said the bill would give unions "tyrannical and dictatorial power over the individual worker". C. A. Miller, vice president and chief lawyer for the American Short Line Railroad Association, an organization of 317 little roads, stressed that the union shop is not necessary for union growth and more democracy in the industry.

Daniel P. Loomis, Association of Western Railways, said the bill would infringe on the rights of individual workers who did not wish to join a particular union.

Giving railroad unions the right to make union shop agreements was opposed by leading Negro spokesmen, who appeared as witnesses May 18. The Negroes, all railway unionists, objected to the bill as introduced, though they said they favored the union shop. They advocated a change to limit the union shop privilege to unions which allow Negroes equal voting membership.

The "big four" unions operating the running trains all bar Negroes from membership, the Committee was told. In the group were: A. Philip Randolph, head of the Sleeping Car Porters-AFL; Joseph C. Waddy, general counsel of the International Association of Railway Employees, and Clarence Mitchell, labor secretary of the National Association for Advancement of Colored People.

John T. Corbett, Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers, opposed the bill, saying it would require workers who were making the gradual transition from fireman to engineer classification to be members of both the fireman and engineer unions. Harry See, Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen, said the same objection would apply to other transitional railway workers, but he endorsed the bill on the condition that it be amended to remove that objection.

The Committee approved the bill Aug. 9 with an amendment specifying that union shop agreements could not require union membership of persons who were denied membership in a union for any reason other than the failure to pay dues, etc.

Debate

The Senate took up the bill Dec. 7 and passed it by voice vote Dec. 11.

Spessard L. Holland, (D Fla.) attempted to amend the bill to rule out union shop agreements where they were banned by state law. The amendment was rejected, 23 to 59 on roll-call vote.

Holland said his amendment would make the bill conform to Taft-Hartley Act provisions and termed the measure "an entering wedge" to breach the Taft-Hartley Act. Holland said 18 or 20 states forbid union shop contracts, among them Florida.

Questioned by Holland, Sen. Robert A. Taft (R Ohio) said he supported the bill, as amended, and had not made the amendment proposed by Holland a condition to his support.

Sen. Claude Pepper (D Fla.) opposed the Holland amendment, declaring that industry-wide contracts were required for workers covered by the Railway Labor Act and that all should have the same rights, regardless of state lines.

Offered by Sen. William E. Jenner (R Ind.), an anti-discrimination amendment was tabled by a roll-call vote of 64-17. Jenner's amendment would have denied the provisions of the Act to labor organizations that segregated or excluded minorities. He said the bill gave railroad labor unions "an enormous increase in power" but contained only "weasel words" in its attempt to correct "such an obvious impossibility" as requiring union membership when unions would not admit certain employees as members.

Sen. Lister Hill (D Ala.), however, said the amendment would create disruption and confusion and would defeat the purpose of the bill.

Taft and Hill won acceptance on voice votes of amendments that the check-off not be used to cover fines or penalties other than periodic or regular dues and assessments. Another amendment by Hill and Taft amplified a Committee change intended to assure that employees would not be required to join more than one union and would be free to shift from one union to another. Approval was also on voice vote.

During the debate, Senators were told that 21 of 22 railway labor organizations favored the "one union" amendment and that membership was not then required in more than one union.

Holland read a letter from John T. Corbett, assistant grand chief engineer and national labor representative of the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers, protesting against the amendment as "an injustice to the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers which could never be overcome."

Hill told the Senate that a railway fireman, promoted to engineer, would have a choice of joining the engineers' union or remaining in the firemen's organization and that the choice similarly would be his in event of demotion from engineer to fireman.

Corbett's letter said the amendment provided the apprentice "assurance he shall never be required to secure membership in the senior organization which his apprenticeship prompts him to endeavor to secure promotion to."

HOUSE

Committee

The House companion bill (HR 7789) was introduced March 21 by Robert Crosser (D Ohio). It was referred to the Commerce Committee, and hearings were held May 9 through June 7. Testimony was similar to that received by the Senate Committee. Most witnesses appeared before both Committees.

The bill was approved by the House Committee Aug. 7 with the same amendment the Senate group had added to specify that union shop agreements could not require union membership of persons denied membership in a union for any reason other than the failure to pay dues, etc.

The measure went to the Rules Committee for clearance to the House floor for action, but failed to emerge from that group. Instead, the Senate-passed version (S 3295) became the vehicle for the Commerce Committee's recommendations. The unit favorably reported S 3295 on Dec. 19 by a vote of 11 to 3. The measure was entered on the House calendar.

Floor Action

The House took up S 3295 on Dec. 21—but a quorum was lacking. Consideration was deferred to the House's unprecedented meeting on New Years Day, 1951.

Accordingly, on Jan. 1, the bill was brought before the House under a parliamentary rule that Rep. Oren Harris (D Ark.) said had not been used in 20 or 25 years. Harris, who spoke for the bill, said the rule provides that "when a Committee of the House reports a bill which is placed on the House Calendar and the Senate passes a bill substantially the same, it is privileged and may be called up from the Speaker's table by some Member directed by the Committee having jurisdiction." Harris said amendments accepted by the Senate made S 3295 substantially the same as the House bill.

Rep. Lindley Beckworth (D Tex.), who called for immediate consideration of the bill under instructions from the House Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee, said it was intended to extend the union shop and dues check-off rights permitted under the Taft-Hartley Act to the railway and airlines industries covered by the Railway Labor Act. The House Committee estimated that 75 to 80 per cent of the 1,200,000 rail workers are members of one of the railroad unions.

Proponents said the amending legislation would not make the union shop mandatory but would permit negotiation of union shop contracts in the industries, even in states which had banned the union shop. Under such contracts, workers would be required to join a union within 60 days after starting work.

Submitting a letter from the national representative of the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers to bolster his statement, Joseph P. O'Hara (R Minn.) said not all the rail unions favored the measure. Dwight L. Rogers (D Fla.) said he opposed the bill because it did not recognize the actions of states, including Florida, which have banned the union shop. Wingate H. Lucas (D Tex.) voiced a similar objection and criticized the manner in which the bill was brought up, declaring it a "sad commentary" that "not one amendment may be offered".

Among those speaking for the bill were Andrew J. Biemiller (D Wis.), Neil J. Linehan (D Ill.), John A. McGuire (D Conn.), Barratt O'Hara (D Ill.), John B. Sullivan (D Mo.), Compton I. White (D Idaho), John B. Bennett (R Mich.), Fred L. Crawford (R Mich.), John W. Heselton (R Mass.) and Hugh D. Scott Jr., (R Pa.).

Final Action

A motion by Howard W. Smith (D Va.) to recommit the bill to the Commerce Committee with instructions for that group to insert an anti-discrimination and state's rights amendment was defeated. The roll-call vote was 61 to 284. The vote on final passage of the legislation was 292 to 52.

Since no changes were made by the House in the Senate-approved measure, the entire bill was cleared to the White House at once. No conference committee was necessary.

The President signed the measure into Public Law 914 on Jan. 10, 1951.

Labor "Monopoly" Bill

S—2912

This measure, introduced Jan. 23, 1950, at the height of the Congressional furor over the United Mine Workers' 6 - month coal "slowdown", was meant to bring under the scope of the anti - trust laws all labor unions which "unreasonably restrained" industries "essential to the national economy, health or safety or any substantial segment thereof."

Nine days of hearings were held by a subcommittee of the Senate Judiciary Committee between Feb. 16 and March 3, 1950. On March 3, the coal dispute, which by then had become a full - fledged strike, was settled and no further hearings were held. The subcommittee, however, reported S 2912 favorably to the full Committee June 30, 1950, but no action was taken on the measure. At the end of the 81st Congress' second session, it was left pending on the Committee's unfinished business calendar.

Background

A dispute over terms of a new contract between the coal operators and the UMW in 1949 brought on a "slowdown" by the miners which lasted well into 1950 and culminated in a month - long strike. Congressmen had much to say about it. (For full account of this story, see p. 275.)

One result was the introduction Jan. 23, 1950, by Sen. A. Willis Robertson (D Va.) of a measure (S 2912) to repeal all anti - trust law exemptions enjoyed by labor unions. The measure was referred to the Senate Judiciary Committee. A subcommittee began hearings Feb. 16. The first witness was Sen. Robertson. He frankly acknowledged that S 2912 was designed to restrain the UMW in particular and end the "slowdown" in coal production.

Draft Extension

HR 6826—P. L. 599

SUMMARY

The Selective Service Extension Act of 1950 was signed by President Truman June 30, five days after the start of the Korean war. It was approved by the House by a roll-call vote of 315-4 on June 27, the day on which the U. S. government announced its intention to help the Korean Republic resist North Korea's aggression. The measure was adopted by the Senate by a roll-call vote of 76-0 June 28.

The final version of HR 6826 differed considerably from the bills that had been adopted earlier by the upper and lower chambers of Congress. The measure that had originally been passed by the House May 24 extended the existing Selective Service Act two years, but required that before anyone could be inducted into the armed forces Congress had to adopt a concurrent resolution declaring that a national emergency existed that necessitated an increase in the armed strength of the U. S.

The bill that had been adopted by the Senate June 22 extended the Selective Service Act three years, and gave the power to order inductions to both the President and Congress. The President, however, could only call men into the service when the legislature was not in session.

The ultimate version of HR 6826 provided for a one-year extension of the Selective Service Act, under which only the President could order inductions. The bill included a provision giving the Chief Executive power to call up for 21 months members of the reserves and the National Guard if he considered such a move necessary.

The President and the Defense Department accepted this compromise version, although they had originally requested that the 1948 Selective Service Act be continued as it was for three years, until 1953. In the view of Defense officials, the international situation was such that the services needed a three-year period in which to plan the orderly building up of their armed strength. Officials were favorable to HR 6826, however, because they felt that, if conditions in 1951 were as bad as they had been at the start of the Korean war, Congress was bound to extend the Selective Service Act of 1948 for another year, if not longer.

Provisions

P. L. 599 is an amendment to the Selective Service Act of 1948. Under P. L. 599's provisions:

1. The 1948 law, which was due to expire June 24, 1950, was extended to July 9, 1951.

2. The President was authorized, until July 9, 1951, to order into active service for a maximum of 21 months members of all the Reserve components of the armed forces, including the National Guard, and all retired Regular armed services personnel.

3. Employees of local draft boards and appeals boards were authorized to be paid at a rate no higher than that being received by people for work of equal importance in the communities in which the boards were located.

The 1950 measure made no other changes in the 1948 Act. (For the terms of P. L. 759 — the Selective Service Act of 1948 — see CQ Almanac, Vol. IV, pp. 235-240.)

HOUSE

Committee

The House Armed Services Committee conducted public hearings on HR 6826 in January, February and May. During the January and February sessions, a total of 43 persons testified before the committee, 12 supporting the measure and 23 voicing opposition.

Seven witnesses expressed no views on the question of drafting men for the service, but argued for the inclusion of an anti-segregation provision in case Congress decided to extend the Selective Service Act. One witness, representing a conscientious objectors' group, requested that if the Selective Service law were extended, permission be granted CO's either to be assigned to service of a non-military nature or be exempted completely from the provisions of the Act.

For stands of groups and individuals, see end of this story.

On May 2 and 3, the chief witnesses were Gen. Omar Bradley, chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, and Secretary of Defense Louis Johnson, who had also appeared at the earlier hearings. Bradley cited as reasons for continuing the draft the advances made by communism in the Far East and the deterioration in relations between the U. S. and several Balkan countries. Even if each situation did not deteriorate further, Bradley told the committee, "the accumulation of them makes the situation worse."

Johnson urged the extension of the draft law beyond June 24, 1950, on the grounds that Russia needed some evidence that we were prepared to defend the free nations of the world against aggression. If the 1948 act were not extended, he argued, our allies would be disillusioned and the U. S. would be left in a weak military posture.

Bill

The House committee approved HR 6826 May 4 by a vote of 31-0. Its version of the measure, however, differed from the bill as it had been introduced in the House Jan. 17, 1950, by Rep. Carl Vinson (D Ga.), committee chairman. The earlier measure had merely called for the extension of the 1948 Selective Service Act for another three years. Under the terms of the committee-approved bill:

1. The act was extended two years.

2. A "trigger provision" was added, providing that no one could be inducted into the armed forces, or be permitted to enlist in the Regular Army for 21 months, (instead of the regular period of three years) or, if 18, be allowed to volunteer for a one-year period, unless Congress adopted a concurrent resolution declaring that a national emergency existed that required an increase in the armed strength of the U. S. (Under the 1948 Act and the original version of HR 6826, the President, not Congress, was authorized to order inductions.)

3. Upon adoption by Congress of such a concurrent resolution, the President would also be authorized to order into active service for a period of 21 months members of the Reserves and National Guard and retired personnel of the Regular armed forces. (Under the 1948 act and the original version of HR 6826, the Reserves and retired Regular armed forces personnel were exempt from active duty in peacetime.)

The committee-approved measure was opposed by the Defense Department which had asked for a simple extension of the 1948 Act. Committee members, however, supported their measure on the grounds that even on a stand-by basis, it would encourage voluntary enlistments and thus meet the armed services' manpower needs. Some members pointed out that, under the 1948 Act, the Navy and Air Force had not inducted a single person, because enough men had volunteered. They acknowledged that the Army had had to draft 30,000 under the 1948 law, but pointed out that no inductions had been ordered by Army officials in almost 18 months.

Debate

There was a short period of debate in the House May 24 before it agreed by voice vote to consider HR 6826 in the Committee of the Whole. During the discussion, Rep. John E. Lyle (D Tex.) supported the measure because of what he called its necessity. Rep. Clare Hoffman (R Mich.) said he would oppose the bill so long as the nation's foreign policy was in the hands of men like Secretary of State Dean Acheson. Acheson, Hoffman asserted, had been willing to stand by Alger Hiss, former State Department official, even though Hiss had been convicted of perjury in connection with charges that he had been a member of a Communist espionage apparatus in Washington during World War II.

Rep. Donald L. O'Toole (D N. Y.) insisted on a stronger measure than the one brought in by the Armed Services Committee. Rep. Leo E. Allen (R Ill.) said he would vote for the bill but hoped that the Appropriations Committees of both houses would see that the cost of running the Selective Service system was kept to a minimum.

When the measure itself came up for consideration in the Committee of the Whole, Vinson offered a detailed explanation for the Armed Services Committee's approval of HR 6826. The approval was due, he said, chiefly to the international situation but also to a dwindling in the number of men enlisting voluntarily in the armed forces.

Vinson Disputed

Rep. A. L. Miller (R Neb.) disputed Vinson's statement regarding world conditions, arguing that the President had just announced that international affairs had improved. Vinson replied that he did not wish to register any disagreement with Mr. Truman but that he placed a great deal of confidence in the nation's military leaders, who had just appeared before his committee and expressed grave concern over the situation in Europe and the Far East.

Rep. Leon H. Gavin (R Pa.) supported Vinson's position. He pointed out that the United States had lost her monopoly of the atom bomb and that the nation had to be prepared for any eventuality. Another reason offered by Gavin for extending the Selective Service Act was that it would save several months' time in the event the U. S. ever got into another war and the armed forces needed a large number of men.

According to Gavin, if a draft law were not already in existence in the event of a conflict, it would take seven months to enact a law, set up new Selective Service machinery and reach an induction rate of 300,000 men a month. With a draft law on the books, he said, such an induction rate could be attained in 3 months.

Anti-Segregation Amendments

The Committee of the Whole approvd HR 6826 after turning back several attempts to amend the Armed Services Committee's version of HR 6826.

One of these, offered by Rep. Adam C. Powell (D N.Y.), would have prohibited discrimination against and segregation of anyone inducted into the armed forces because of race, creed or color. The proposal was opposed by Vinson, who said that progress was already being made under the President's executive order of 1948 calling for a progressive breaking down of segregation barriers in the armed forces. The Committee of the Whole defeated this amendment by a division vote of 23-107.

A second amendment, by Rep. Jacob K. Javits (R N.Y.), would have modified Powell's amendment by merely making it Congressional policy that "the obligations and privileges of serving in the armed forces and the reserve components thereof shall be without discrimination in selection or service, or segregation on account of race, creed, color or national origin." This proposal was also opposed by Vinson, and it was rejected by voice vote.

A third amendment, by Rep. Charles E. Bennett (D Fla.) would have required the President to get the approval of the Joint Chiefs of Staff before issuing any additional orders regarding segregation in the armed forces. This proposal was also rejected by voice vote.

An amendment by Rep. A. L. Miller (R Neb.) would have postponed the registration and classification of young men turning 18 until Jan. 24, 1951, and even longer if Congress so declared. The amendment was rejected by voice vote.

Dollinger Approach

An amendment by Rep. Isidore Dollinger (D N.Y.) would have prohibited discrimination against members of the armed forces both in and outside military installatfons. Under the terms of the Dollinger proposal:

Jim Crow regulations would have been barred in inter-state travel for armed forces personnel regardless of their race, creed or color; attacking or lynching a draftee would have been made a Federal offense; members of the armed forces would have had an option as to whether they wished to serve in states with discriminatory racial laws on their books; and contractors holding government orders would have had to abide by a set of fair employment practices similar to those recommended by the President's Civil Rights Commission.

The Dollinger amendment never came up for a vote. Vinson argued that it was not germane to the bill under discussion, and the chairman of the Committee of the Whole agreed.

Final Action

After the Committee of the Whole approved HR 6826 May 24, it was considered the same day by the House itself, where it ran up against a number of complicated parliamentary maneuvers.

First, Rep. Clare Hoffman (R Mich.) made a motion to recommit. The motion was rejected. Second, Rep. Vito Marcantonio (ALP N.Y.) demanded a roll-call vote on the measure. The demand was rejected. Third, when the House voted on HR 6826 and it was announced that the ayes had it, Marcantonio objected that a quorum was not present. When the roll was called and a quorum was found to be present, Marcantonio demanded a division vote on the bill. This demand was accepted but the measure was nevertheless adopted, 216 to 11.

AMENDMENTS REJECTED

Adam Clayton Powell (D N.Y.)— Ban discrimination and segregation because of race, creed or color. Division vote 23-107.

Jacob K. Javits (R N. Y.) — Make it the policy of Congress that service be without discrimination or segregation. Voice.

Charles Bennett (D Fla.) — Provide that no order for or against segregation shall be effective until approved by the Joint Chiefs of Staff as in the best interest of the national defense. Voice.

A. L. Miller (R Neb.) — Postpone Act until Jan. 24, 1951. Voice.

Isidore Dollinger (D N.Y.) — Prohibit discrimination against members of armed forces on and off military installations, and require contractors holding government orders to abide by fair employment practices. Ruled out of order as not germane.

SENATE

Committee

The Senate Armed Services Committee considered two bills on the question of extending the 1948 Selective Service Act when it held public hearings June 1, 5, and 8. One was S 2861, which, like the original version of HR 6826, merely continued the provisions of the 1948 law for another three years. The other was the measure that the House had adopted May 24.

A total of 16 witnesses appeared before the Senate group, 11 of whom opposed extension of the draft in any form, and four who favored extension. The final witness was Albert Black, Washington chairman of the Committee Against Jim Crowism in the Military Service and Training. Black had no opinion on selective service as such, but he urged the committee to include an anti-discrimination and anti-segregation provision in any draft-extension bill it reported.

The witnesses who supported extension of selective service were Secretary of Defense Louis Johnson; Gen. Omar Bradley, chairman, Joint Chiefs of Staff; Gen. J. Lawton Collins, Chief of Staff of the Army; and Maj. Gen. Lewis B. Hershey, director of Selective Service. Among the persons who objected to the continuation of the draft were L. C. Halvorson, of the National Grange; Frederick J. Libby, of the National Council for Prevention of War; George D. Riley, of the American Federation of Labor; and John M. Swomley, Jr., of the National Council Against Conscription.

Johnson Testimony

When he appeared before the committee, Johnson urged that the 1948 act be extended for three years and that the President, not Congress, be authorized to order inductions whenever voluntary enlistments declined below what the armed forces considered a safe level. Johnson said that, if the House bill were adopted, America's friends abroad would be demoralized and that valuable time would be lost in the event voluntary enlistments dropped dangerously and the services needed to draft men in order to fill their manpower quotas.

Under the House bill, Johnson pointed out, a concurrent resolution had to be adopted by Congress before the compulsory provisions of the Selective Service Act could be put into effect.

John Swomley, representing the National Council Against Conscription, opposed the proposed bill on the grounds that the international situation was not as bad as the military claimed. Swomley disputed Johnson's argument that the Selective Service Act had stopped the spread of communism when it was passed in 1948, and that an extension of the law was necessary to halt Russia's aggressive moves in 1950. The way to halt the Communist drive for world domination, Swomley said, was to improve economic conditions both here and abroad, and not by "preparation for war."

The arguments of several other opponents of selective service were somewhat similar to those put forward by Swomley. A few witnesses before the Senate committee felt that the draft, even on a stand-by basis, was tending to militarize the nation to a dangerous degree.

Bill Reported

The Senate Armed Services Committee favorably reported HR 6826 to the upper chamber June 9. Under the provisions of the version adopted by the Senate body:

1. The 1948 Act was extended three years.

2. Persons inducted or volunteering under the measure received the right to ask to be assigned to units consisting solely of members of their own race if they did not wish to be sent to units that were racially mixed. Commissioned officers were prohibited from assigning a man to a mixed unit if he had indicated a preference for a unit composed only of members of his own race.

The Senate committee approved the provision regarding racially "pure" and mixed units at the insistence of Sen. Richard B. Russell (D Ga.), who disagreed vigorously with President Truman's order providing for progressive abolition of segregation practices in the armed forces. Russell said that most Southerners objected to the order and that, if voluntary enlistments were falling off, it was due chiefly to the dislike of young Southerners of placement in units composed of both white and colored personnel. He declared that Congress had a duty to allow inductees and enlistees to decide for themselves whether they wished to serve in racially mixed detachments.

Debate

The Senate debated HR 6826 the better part of two days — June 21 and June 22. On June 21, controversy centered chiefly around virtually identical amendments by Sens. Scott Lucas (D Ill.) and Leverett Saltonstall (R Mass.) to eliminate the Armed Services Committee's provision on segregation.

Saltonstall told the Senate that the President's anti - segregation order had already done away with most of the discriminatory practices in the Navy and Air Force, and that progress was being made in the Army. According to Saltonstall, the committee's provision allowing optional service in mixed or unmixed units would set back the anti-segregation movement in all the services many years.

The provision was defended on the Senate floor by Russell, who said that the President's anti - segregation order was in violation of the Constitution. The amendment proposed by Lucas, however, was adopted by the upper chamber by a roll-call vote of 42-29.

Emergency Extension

On June 22, the Senate took time out from its debate on HR 6826 to pass by voice vote Senate Joint Resolution 190 (P. L. 572), which extended the 1948 Selective Service Act for 15 days beyond June 24, the act's expiration date.

The resolution had been introduced by Sen. Millard E. Tydings (D Md.), chairman of the Armed Services Committee, who feared that the 1948 law would go out of existence before the enactment of any new legislation.

In the discussion on the resolution, Lucas contended that if Congress did not adopt HR 6826 in some form by June 24, the entire machinery of Selective Service would come to a halt. He argued that, regardless of its views on extending the draft, Congress should permit the old law to remain on the books until a final vote was taken one way or the other on the matter.

House Concurred

After the resolution was passed by the Senate, it was forwarded to the House. The latter by voice vote adopted the measure in a matter of minutes. The President signed it the following day, June 23.

Watkins Amendment

Before the Senate acted on HR 6826 June 22, it considered an amendment by Sen. Arthur V. Watkins (R Utah), to authorize Congress, rather than the President, to order inductions into the service. Under the terms of the amendment, before anyone could be called up for active duty, Congress would have to adopt a concurrent resolution declaring that it was necessary to supplement voluntary enlistments so that the strength of the armed forces could be brought up to the level for which Congress had made appropriations in the annual budget and other measures. The President would have no say whatever regarding the matter.

Saltonstall objected to Watkins' amendment, arguing that the President, as the Commander in Chief, should have the same power as Congress to order inductions if an emergency arose. Saltonstall then offered an amendment to Watkins' giving the President such power.

But before a vote could be taken on the proposal it was modified further to provide that the President be authorized to order inductions only when Congress was not in session and a situation of "national necessity" was found to exist.

The Senate by voice vote adopted Watkins' amendment after the Utah senator accepted Saltonstall's amendment, as modified.

Draft Board Pay

The Senate agreed by voice vote to an amendment by Sen. Virgil Chapman (D Ky.), exempting employees of local draft boards and appeals boards from the provisions of the 1949 Classification Act. Under the amendment, the pay of selective service system workers in a particular community was kept equal to that of such persons as county employees in the same community.

In his discussion of his proposal, Chapman told the Senate that under the 1949 Classification Act, draft board employees were getting more money than people doing work of equal importance, thus creating a serious morale problem.

Sen. Russell made another attempt to include in HR 6826 a provision allowing servicemen to decide for themselves whether they would serve in racially "pure" or mixed units. He offered an amendment providing that everyone inducted or enlisted in the armed forces under HR 6826 be asked whether he preferred to be assigned to one kind of unit or another. If a majority of men from 36 states expressed preference for assignment to units composed solely of members of their own race, the armed forces would have to respect their wishes and send them to such units. If a majority did not express such preference, the proposed amendment would not go into effect.

The Senate defeated the Russell proposal by a roll-call vote of 27-45

Sen Hubert H. Humphrey (D Minn.) introduced an amendment to prohibit civilians from committing or inciting the commitment of violence against armed forces personnel, regardless of their race, color, or creed, and from interfering with law enforcement officers arresting a serviceman who had committed a crime.

Humphrey argued that several instances involving violence against members of the armed forces had occurred in World War II and that the amendment was designed to prevent such incidents from taking place in the future. Sen. Burnet R. Maybank D S.C.) said he had never heard of any cases of violence against servicemen, and implied that the amendment was aimed primarily at the South.

After Humphrey indicated that he was not prepared to put up any prolonged fight for the idea, Sen. Edwin Johnson (D Colo.) moved that the proposal be tabled. By a voice vote, the Senate agreed to do this.

Long View Taken

In the course of the debate on HR 6826, a number of Senators discussed the general reasons for extension. Sen. Tydings said that if HR 6826 were passed by Congress, it would keep in being the thousands of local draft boards making up the Selective Service system, and would encourage voluntary enlistments by virtue of its "trigger provisions".

Sen. Saltonstall said that the bill would actually enable the services to maintain a relatively small force in being since they would feel confident that, in case of an emergency or a drastic falling off of voluntary enlistments, they could put the draft into operation at a moment's notice, calling up men who had already been registered and classified.

Sen. Lucas pointed out that, under the 1948 Selective Service Act, about 20 million men had registered and been classified. If HR 6826 were not adopted in some form, Lucas said, the records on these men would become void and, in the event of a crisis of some kind, a totally new registration would have to be made of eligible men between 18 and 26.

Sen. Kenneth Wherry (R Neb.) said he did not object to the general idea of extending the draft law on a standby basis, but he wondered why the bill could not lapse in two instead of three years. Sen. Andrew F. Schoeppel (R Kan.) and Sen. Tydings plunged into a debate on the general question of mobilization. Schoeppel said he hoped that a bill would be passed mobilizing industry and labor, since it was unfair to order inductions without also calling on other parts of the nation to sacrifice for the common welfare.

Sen Tydings defended the Administration's position, pointing out that measures were being considered for the mobilization of industry in the event of an emergency and that, furthermore, the 1948 Selective Service Act already authorized the President to compel manufacturers and others to provide the services with adequate amounts of supplies and equipment.

Final Action

The Armed Services Committee's version of HR 6826, together with the amendments approved on the Senate floor, was adopted by the upper chamber by voice vote June 22.

AMENDMENTS ACCEPTED

Scott Lucas (D Ill.) — Eliminate provision in bill approved by Senate Armed Services Committee requiring armed forces to assign inductees and volunteers to units consisting of members of their own race, if they so desired. Roll call, 42-29.

Arthur V. Watkins (R Utah) — Authorize Congress to order inductions when it is in session, but grant this power to the President when Congress is adjourned and a "national necessity" is found to exist. Voice.

Virgil Chapman (D Ky.) — Require payment to Selective Service system workers in a particular community of wages that are no higher than those of persons doing work of equal importance in same community. Voice.

AMENDMENTS REJECTED

Richard B. Russell (D Ga.) — Direct that everyone inducted or volunteering in the armed forces be asked whether he preferred to be assigned to "pure" or mixed unit. If a majority of men from 36 states expressed preference for units composed solely of members of their own race, armed forces would be required to assign these servicemen to such units. If a majority did not express such preference, the military would be permitted to continue the present policy of a gradual breakdown of segregation barriers between races. Roll call, 27-45.

Hubert H. Humphrey (D Minn.) — Prohibit civilians from committing or inciting the commitment of violence against armed forces personnel regardless of race, creed, color or national origin. Tabled, by voice vote, on motion of Edwin Johnson (D Colo.)

CONFERENCE

Because of the differences between their respective bills, the Senate asked the House for a conference on June 22. The lower chamber agreed June 26.

The conferees appointed to try to compose the differences between the two versions of HR 6826 consisted of ten members, five from the Senate and five from the House. Representing the upper chamber were Tydings, Harry F. Byrd (D Va.), Chapman, Saltonstall, and Chan Gurney (R S.D.), Vinson, Overton Brooks (D La.), Paul Kilday (D Tex.), Dewey Short (R Mo.), and Leslie C. Arends (R Ill.) represented the House.

The conferees reached an agreement on a compromise measure June 27, a day after they began work. According to the report it made to Congress, the committee came to a settlement quickly "due to world conditions". (Referring to the outbreak of hostilities in Korea on June 25.)

Conferees Make Changes

The conferees made several major changes in both the House and Senate versions of HR 6826. Following are the main actions that the committee took:

1. Extended the Selective Service Act until July 9, 1951, in substantially the same form as it had been passed in 1948. The House had voted for a two-year extension, the Senate a three-year extension.

2. Continued the President's power to order inductions when he saw fit. The House had wanted this power to rest solely with Congress. The Senate had wanted it to be given to Congress and the President.

3. Empowered the President to call up for active duty for 21 months members of the Reserves and the National Guard, and retired personnel of the Regular armed forces. The House had included such a provision in the bill it passed. The Senate had omitted it.

4. Included a clause fixing the wages of draft board employees at no higher a level than that paid persons doing work of equal importance in the communities in which the draft boards were located. The Senate had approved such a provision. The House had not.

House Adopts Compromise

The House acted on the conference report June 27, the same day it was filed. Before the compromise bill was passed, however, Vinson delivered a speech in which he attacked the Soviet Union for the aggressive steps it had taken since the end of World War II, and for its refusal to co-operate with other nations in building a peaceful world.

Vinson declared that the House and Senate managers had been deadlocked for a time over the differences between the bills adopted by the two chambers, but that they agreed to extend the 1948 Act in substantially its original form because of the threat to world peace posed by the Korean conflict.

HR 6826 was passed by the House by a roll-call vote of 315-4. Those voting against the measure were Reps. Fred L. Crawford (R Mich.), Robert Crosser (D Ohio), Michael A. Feighan (D Ohio), and Vito Marcantonio (ALP N. Y.).

Senate Agrees Too

Sen. Tydings tried to get the Senate to vote on HR 6826 on June 27, but Sen. James P. Kem (R Mo.) objected, insisting that on so important a bill, the upper chamber be given enough time to study its provisions. Kem said that he particularly opposed too quick a consideration because the conference report differed so radically from the bill that had been adopted by the Senate just a few days previously.

The upper chamber finally took action on HR 6826 on June 28, adopting the compromise measure proposed by the conference committee by a roll-call vote of 76-0.

LAW ENACTED

The bill was signed by the President June 30.

After the Korean war began, Congress passed two other major laws regarding armed service personnel. They were P. L. 624, which extended the enlistments of all personnel already in service one year, and P. L. 655, which suspended the ceilings on the authorized strength of the military establishment. (See pages 300 and 299 for more material on these measures.)

LOBBY STANDS

A fairly large number of individuals and organizations testified before the House and Senate Armed Services Committees on HR 6826. Forty-three, for example, appeared at hearings conducted by the House group, while 16 testified before the Senate body.

The stands taken varied greatly, some witnesses opposing extension of selective service outright, and others confining their remarks to such matters as segregation in the armed forces. Below are the names of important groups that appeared before the two Armed Services Committees, together with the positions they took:

Jewish War Veterans of the United States urged extension of the draft law as a booster of continued high voluntary Army enlistments.

Veterans of Foreign Wars supported continuation of the draft but opposed making Congress the final authority for actual induction of men. Congress could not act with "the required dispatch", it said.

Disabled American Veterans supported the temporary extension of the draft but also urged enactment of universal military training.

National Guard Association of the United States urged enactment of the temporary draft bill, "primarily as an emergency measure."

Chamber of Commerce of New York State adopted a resolution, which it submitted to members of Congress, supporting extension of the draft law for three years.

24th Women's Patriotic Conference on National Defense recommended extension of the draft for an indefinite period, in a resolution mailed to Congressmen.

Legion's Stand

American Legion opposed extension of the draft but urged "in the interest of lasting security and peace" the adoption of the plan of universal military training.

Committee Against Jim Crow in Military Service and Training asked amendments to the law abolishing segregation and discrimination in the selective service program.

National Board of The Young Women's Christian Association wanted amendments to the draft law forbidding segregation in the armed services.

Antidiscrimination Committee, American Newspaper Guild (CIO), urged inclusion of safeguards against segregation and discrimination in any "new military-service legislation".

Church Groups'

National Conference of Methodist Youth opposed extension of the law and urged that the United States "engage in a more positive program of building peace through a strengthening of the United Nations, international control of atomic energy and a world recovery program".

Mennonite Central Committee Peace Section opposed peacetime conscription "even in a slumbering form".

Commission on World Peace of the Methodist Church opposed the standby draft legislation on the grounds that "to win in this world America's posture must be that of a democracy of free men facing the future with a positive program for mankind; not a Prussian posture of fear behind a false face of peacetime conscription".

Council on Christian Social Progress of the Northern Baptist Convention declared the organization's opposition to peacetime compulsory military training or selective service.

Indiana Council of Churches said their organization was "unanimously opposed to peacetime conscription".

OTHER STANDS

War Resisters League opposed any form of conscription and asked "for nothing short of its abolition".

National Council for Prevention of War asked Congress to let the law die, calling for an end to "this process of manufacturing inevitability, this government by crises . . . to prevent our brass hats from gaining complete control of our economy and our institutions".

National Council Against Conscription opposed the stand-by draft proposal on the grounds it "is a mobilization bill, leaving far too dangerous powers in the hands of the President and the military". It said the Army's needs could be met without the draft law.

National Women's Committee to Oppose Conscription opposed the draft extension on the grounds it would be used by the military as "a substitute for UMT".

Friends Committee on National Legislation asked Congress to say "no" to draft extension.

Norman Thomas, chairman of the Post War World Council, told the Committee continuance of the draft "is an expense and there is always explicit in the notion of conscription a blow to liberty not warranted by any existing emergency".

Legislative Committee of the American Federation of Labor opposed the three-year extension of the draft.

National Grange opposed peacetime draft on the grounds it would tend toward development of an "unnecessarily large and wasteful military organization".

Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen opposed continuance of the selective service law.

National Women's Christian Temperance Union opposed the peacetime draft on the grounds the Army had sufficiently high voluntary enlistment.

International Convention of Disciples of Christ opposed conscription as the wrong way to promote national security. It said ideas — not military invasion or attack — are the weapons with which the confused and frustrated peoples of the world are now being assaulted.

Women's International League for Peace and Freedom described the gigantic military appropriations and the proposed extension of the draft as being "in preparation for war rather than preparation for peace". It opposed the draft on these grounds.

Armed Forces Strength

SUMMARY

Congress adopted HR 9178, the bill that suspended the ceilings on the size of the armed forces, because of manpower needs growing out of the Korean war. After its outbreak, according to Defense Department officials, the various services could not at once go beyond the personnel ceilings set by the Selective Service Act of 1948 and other measures limiting the size of the military establishment.

However on July 19, President Truman asked the lawmakers to authorize the suspension of personnel ceilings in the same message in which he requested a special appropriation of $10.5 billion for the Korean war, certain economic controls, and other legislation designed to prepare the country for any eventuality. The President made these requests 24 days after the start of the Korean conflict.

HR 9178 was adopted by the House by voice vote July 25 and by the Senate by voice vote July 26. The measure approved by the upper chamber differed from the House bill on the question of a time limit for the legislation, and so it was returned to the House. The latter body rapidly agreed to the Senate amendment July 31, and the measure became Public Law 655 on Aug. 3, when the President signed it.

Provisions

P. L. 655 suspended existing statutory limits on the authorized strength of the armed forces until July 31, 1954. To effect this suspension, P. L. 655 amended the three laws that had fixed these limits: The Act of April 18, 1946, which affected the Regular Navy, the Selective Service Act of 1948, as amended, and the Army, Air Force Composition Act of 1950.

Under the Act of April 18, 1946, the maximum strength of the Regular Navy was set at 500,000. Under the Selective Service Act of 1948, as amended, the maximum strength of the Navy, including Regular and non-Regular personnel was set at 666,882; that of the Air Force at 502,000 and that of the Army at 837,000. The Army, Air Force Composition Act of 1950 authorized personnel ceilings of 837,000 for the Army and 502,000 for the Air Force.

(See p. 303 for story on Army, Air Force Composition Act of 1950; CQ Almanac, Vol. IV, pp. 234 - 240, for story on Selective Service Act of 1948.)

HOUSE

The House Armed Services Committee July 24 favorably reported HR 9178 after changing the original measure introduced in the lower chamber July 19 by Rep. Carl Vinson (D Ga.), the committee chairman. The original version of HR 9178 provided for the suspension of the authorized strength of the armed forces until July 9, 1951. And it did not specifically provide for the suspension of a provision in the 1946 act that set the maximum size of the Marine Corps at 20 per cent of the Navy's size.

The bill approved by the Armed Services Committee called for the suspension of the personnel ceilings of the armed services indefinitely. At the same time, it indefinitely suspended the Marine Corps provision.

Vote Follows Criticism

The House by voice vote adopted HR 9178 on July 25, after several representatives had criticized the Administration for the situation in which the nation found itself. Two Congressmen — Gerald R. Ford (R Mich.) and John R. Walsh (D Ind.) revived issues aired at the 1949 B-36 hearings. (See CQ Almanac, Vol. V, pp. 499-502.)

One of the critical lawmakers was Rep. Harry L. Towe (R N.J.), who said he was for lifting the personnel ceilings of the armed forces but that he wanted to know what the Administration had in mind regarding foreign policy before voting on the provisions of HR 9178.

Reps. James W. Wadsworth (R N.Y.) and Thomas E. Martin (R Iowa) declared that the real answer to the nation's military manpower problem was universal military training rather than the draft, though they acknowledged that the immediate situation required the calling up of qualified men under the Selective Service law.

James E. Van Zandt (R Pa.) argued that if the President had listened to the House Armed Services Committee, of which Van Zandt was a member, the nation would have had a 70-group Air Force at the start of the Korean war, rather than the 48 groups it actually did have. Joseph R. Bryson (D S.C.) also talked about the necessity for 70 air groups, and then called on the President to proclaim a national emergency and take all necessary steps to strengthen the nation's military defenses.

SENATE

The Senate Armed Services Committee July 21 favorably reported to the Senate a bill (S 3939) identical with the measure that had been submitted by the House Armed Services Committee. Similar to the bill approved by the House body, S 3939 suspended personnel ceilings indefinitely, and cancelled the provision in the Act of April 18, 1946 that set the maximum size of the Marine Corps at 20 per cent of that of the Navy.

The Senate however set aside S 3939 and took action on HR 9178 instead, because the House bill had already been approved by the lower chamber when the question of suspending personnel ceilings came before the upper house.

Senate Made One Change

The Senate made only one change in the House-approved bill, but it was an important one. As passed by the House, HR 9178 lifted the ceiling on the armed strength of the armed forces indefinitely. The Senate bill provided that the suspension would be in effect only until July 31, 1954.

The time limit amendment was approved by the Senate after it was submitted by Kenneth S. Wherry (R Neb.). Wherry said he was not opposed to the lifting of the personnel ceilings of all the armed services, but wanted to give Congress the right to review the legislation in a reasonable amount of time.

The amended version of HR 9178 was adopted by the Senate by voice vote July 26.

Final Action

The House by voice vote July 31 concurred in the Senate's amendment. Before the vote, however, Rep. Vinson pointed out that the Selective Service Act was the most important measure relating to the size of the armed services, that it would expire July 9, 1951, and that Congress would then have an opportunity to review the whole question of the military establishment's personnel ceilings.

Extension Of Enlistments

SUMMARY

Shortly after the outbreak of the Korean war, President Truman requested a 12-months extension of all current enlistments then being served by members of the armed forces. His request was made in his July 19 message to Congress outlining steps which he thought were necessary to prosecute the Korean war successfully and block possible aggressive moves by Russia in other parts of the world.

Defense leaders also urged the enactment of such legislation on the grounds that thousands of enlistments were due to expire in the months immediately ahead. Unless authority was given to extend these enlistments, they contended, the effort to defeat Communist armies would be seriously hampered.

Congress responded promptly. To extend enlistments for one year, the Senate adopted S 3937 by voice vote on July 21, and the House followed suit on July 25. President Truman signed the measure into law on July 27.

Provisions

The enlistment extension measure (S 3937):

1. Authorized the President up to July 9, 1951, to extend the enlistments of members of the armed forces by a period of 12 months.

2. Authorized servicemen receiving family allowances under the Career Compensation Act of 1949 (See Almanac, Vol. V, page 481) to continue receiving them even though they do not re-enlist but are kept in service solely by virtue of S 3937.

3. Directed the Navy to suspend the practice of giving one-fourth additional pay to servicemen detained beyond the original terms of their enlistments, if the detention results from S 3937.

This provision was included because under an old law members of the Navy who were on the high seas or in a foreign port of call when their normal enlistment periods terminated received a bonus of one-quarter of their pay because of the additional time they put in.

SENATE

The Senate Armed Services Committee unanimously approved S 3937 on July 21. In reporting it to the Senate, the group pointed out that 372,000 enlistments were due to expire between August, 1950, and July, 1951, and that only about half of these could be expected to be renewed.

The measure was taken up in the Senate the same day it was reported, although Kenneth S. Wherry (R Neb.) suggested that it might be advisable to hold up its consideration for a while.

He withdrew his objection, however, after Sen. Wayne Morse (R Ore.) pointed out that the committee report was approved unanimously. Morse said that one of the reasons the report was supported by all members of the Armed Services Committee was that Sen. Millard E. Tydings (D Md.), the committee chairman, promised to introduce legislation providing for family allotments.

These were to apply to all servicemen whose enlistments were extended, as well as to those inducted or volunteering after the enactment of S 3937.

After this relatively brief exchange, the Senate passed S 3937 by a voice vote.

HOUSE

The House Armed Services Committee on July 24 favorably reported a bill (HR 9177) identical to S 3937, which by then had passed the Senate. Because of this, the House set aside its own companion measure, and substituted S 3937 in its stead.

Rep. Carl Vinson (D Ga.), chairman of the House Committee, opened debate by asserting that Congress had ample precedent for authorizing the extension of enlistments in the armed forces. In 1917 and again in 1941, he pointed out, enlistments were extended beyond their expiration dates so as not to weaken the country at a critical moment.

Vinson said that Gen. Douglas MacArthur, supreme commander of the UN forces in Korea, had personally requested the legislation, fearing that if enlistments were not continued the war effort would be seriously harmed.

Administration Blamed

Rep. Dewey Short (R Mo.) declared that the administration was chiefly responsible for the country's apparent lack of military preparedness at the start of the Korean war. Rep. Francis Case (R S.D.) asserted that if the military were not as ready as they should have been when the Communists invaded the Korean Republic, it was due to the fact that the Administration froze a good part of the funds that Congress had appropriated for the armed forces.

Rep. Frederick R. Coudert, Jr. (R N.Y.) said that what he called the nation's failure in international affairs was due to the President's faulty foreign policy.

Defenders Strike Back

Reps. Chet Holifield and Clyde Doyle, both Democrats of California, disputed the arguments put forth by the Administration's critics. Holifield contended that if the military establishment did not have enough supplies and equipment at the time the Korean war began, it was due to the critics' cries for economy in the 80th and 81st Congresses.

Doyle declared that the fight against communism could not be waged solely on a battlefield.

The House approved S 3937 by voice vote on July 25.

SUMMARY

Congress, faced with the need of a greatly expanded military establishment, acted rapidly in August to provide enlisted soldiers and sailors with family allowances, more liberal than those provided during World War II. The action was speeded because military leaders explained to Congress that no married men could be drafted until an allowance was provided for their families. At the same time, families of Reservists and National Guardsmen called to active duty were found to be in need of immediate allowances.

Bills differing in details were approved by the House and Senate. The Senate passed its version on voice vote Aug. 22; the House acted Aug. 23 on roll call vote 362-0 (vote P. 358). The two versions were compromised by a joint conference and approved in the final form by both houses Aug. 31. The President signed it into Public Law 771.

Provisions

The bill provides the following allowance to Army enlisted men and equivalent grades in the Navy, Air Force and Marine Corps:

	DEPENDENT'S ALLOWANCE			Plus allotment from GI's pay
	1 Dependent	2 Dependents	3 Dependents
M/Sgt.	$67.50	$67.50	$85.00	$80.00
SFC	67.50	67.50	85.00	80.00
Sgt.	67.50	67.50	85.00	60.00
Cpl.	67.50	67.50	85.00	60.00
PFC	45.00	67.50	85.00	40.00
Pvt.	45.00	67.50	85.00	40.00
Rct.	45.00	67.50	85.00	40.00

In addition to the money authorized, the following general provisions were included in the bill:

Dependent's allowance was to be paid technically in the form of a "quarters" allowance, which hitherto was paid only to the top three grades of enlisted men who lived off the post with their families.

Career Compensation Act of 1949 was amended to specify that a dependent did not actually have to live with the soldier in order for the "quarters" allowance to be paid.

Quarters allowance was extended to all grades of enlisted men.

A soldier had to be responsible for more than one half the support of a dependent before an allowance could be paid.

Collection of over erroneous payments made under the wartime Dependents Allowance Act of 1942 was made subject to waiver by the Comptroller General if such collection would be "against equity and good conscience". (This refers to overpayments made the subject of a separate Congressional investigation.)

Payments were made retroactive to Aug. 1, 1950, but allotments from enlisted men's pay were not started until November, 1950.

Armed Forces were directed to consider release of men with more than three dependents.

Expiration of the act was set at April 30, 1953.

HOUSE

Committee

Chairman Carl Vinson (D Ga.) introduced a family allowance bill (HR 9262) July 27 after complaints had reached Congress that families of some Reservists and Guardsmen called for duty in Korea were suffering because of the lack of a family allowance. At that time only the top three grades of enlisted men living off the post with their families were paid an allowance. The bill was sent to the Armed Services Committee, headed by Vinson.

The measure was turned over to a subcommittee headed by Overton Brooks (D La.). The Defense Department quickly approved the principle of a family allowance as proposed in the bill. The Subcommittee then worked on exact figures for government payments to the dependents and the supplementary payments to dependents to be taken from the GI's regular pay.

The President sent Bureau of The Budget recommendations to Congress Oct. 16 suggesting payments of $75 a month for the first dependent (wife) plus $25 a month for additional dependents (children) — up to $150 a month. A dependent parent would get $60 a month, two parents would get a total of $70. Half of the allowance was to come out of the serviceman's pay, the other half from the government. The Budget Bureau recommended that men with more than three children not be taken into the Armed Services.

Similar allotments for both officers and enlisted men were proposed in another bill (HR 9469) turned over to the Subcommittee. A proposal before the Subcommittee to authorize medical care for servicemen's dependents at military hospitals, was opposed by a representative of the American Medical Association who said the scheme would be unworkable and would interfere with care needed by servicemen.

Brooks drew up a new bill (HR 9477) and introduced it Aug. 21. The Armed Services Committee then approved the new measure unanimously Aug. 22. The Bill provided the following scale of payments:

	DEPENDENT'S ALLOWANCE			Plus allotment from GI's pay
	1 Dependent	2 Dependents	3 Dependents
M/Sgt.	$70	$70	$85	...
SFC	70	70	85	...
Sgt.	70	70	85	...
Cpl.	70	70	85
PFC	45	70	85	$40
Pvt.	45	70	85	40
Rct.	45	70	85	40

The committee said it was not necessary to specify allotments from the pay of higher ranking men as they were presumably older, more responsible and would send money home without orders. The extra medical care was left out; the Defense Department was authorized to waive collection of any past overpayments of dependents allowances; service heads were directed to consider discharge of men with more than three dependents; government payments to dependents were made retroactive to Aug. 1; allotments from the soldier's check were to start in November. Cost of the bill for fiscal year 1951 was estimated by the Committee at $360 million for an armed strength of 2,500,000 men. The act was to expire April 30, 1953.

Debate

The House took up HR 9477 Aug. 23 and gave it swift, unanimous approval. Brooks led support for the bill. He said it was aimed at caring for "those persons who need help the most; that is, the wives and children and the truly dependent mothers and fathers" of the men in the armed forces.

August H. Andersen (R Minn.) although not opposed to the bill, said that more care should be taken of those men drafted who were buying their homes. Some of them, he said, were spending between $50 and $75 a month in buying their homes, and some provision should be made for them. Charles A. Wolverton (R N.J.) called for quick, unanimous passage of the bill "as it deserves".

One amendment was added. Edward H. Rees (R Kan.) objected to the provision which would have allowed the Defense Department to waive collection of an estimated $32 million of family allowance overpayments made during the last war. Rees' amendment giving the Comptroller General power to waive only hardship cases was adopted on voice vote.

The bill was then passed on roll-call vote 362-0 (vote P. 358). The Senate number (S 4071) was put on the measure.

SENATE

Committee

The Senate Armed Services Committee was sent S 3986, a dependents allowance bill based on World War II allowances, July 27.

The bill was introduced by Millard Tydings (D Md.), chairman of the Committee. Tydings said it later became clear that the recently revised pay scale for military personnel made the old system of allowances impractical. So he and his committee drew up a new bill (S 4071) which Tydings formally introduced August 21.

The revision, slightly less liberal than the House measure, embodied suggestions by the Budget Bureau and Selective Service Director Lewis B. Hershey. The Committee also heard testimony from the families of National Guardsmen and Reservists recently called to active duty.

At the request of the Defense Department the Committee modified a provision that would have directed discharge of all men with more than three dependents. Military officers said the provision would mean the loss of 25,000 noncommissioned officers, many of them on duty in Korea. So the bill was changed to make it "the sense of Congress" that men with more than three dependents be discharged if possible and that none should be inducted in the future.

Payments offered in the bill were:

	DEPENDENT'S ALLOWANCE			Plus allotment from GI's pay
	1 Dependent	2 Dependents	3 Dependents
M/Sgt.	$67.50	$67.50	$75	$80
SFC	67.50	67.50	75	80
Sgt.	67.50	67.50	75	60
Cpl.	67.50	67.50	75	60
PFC	45.00	67.50	75	40
Pvt.	45.00	67.50	75	40
Rct.	45.00	67.50	75	40

Other provisions specified that the Defense Department could waive collection of overpayments of wartime family allowances, set the effective date of the act as July 1, 1950, with the men starting their allotments in November and set April 30 1953, as the cutoff date of the bill. Committee approval was unanimous Aug. 21.

Debate

Senate debate on the bill was perfunctory. Tydings backed his bill, saying, "We have tried to write a measure with the least ultimate cost as well as the least present cost to the government." Although there was no general objection to the bill, Hubert H. Humphrey (D Minn.) and Bourke B. Hickenlooper (R Iowa) said the smaller payments to the low ranks were unfair. They called for more equality.

The bill was approved without amendment on voice vote Aug. 22.

CONFERENCE

The bill was then sent to a joint House-Senate conference for a compromise on differences in the two versions. Representing the House were Vinson, Brooks, Paul J. Kilday (D Tex.) and Dewey Short (R Mo.).

Representing the Senate were Harry F. Byrd (D Va.), Virgil M. Chapman (D Ky.) and Chan Gurney (R S.D.).

Most of the original Senate figures are agreed to by the conferees, although the higher House total for three dependents was accepted. The House provision on wartime overpayment of allowances was accepted as was the House direction that the Armed Services should consider discharge of men with more than three dependents. The bill was made effective from August 1, 1950, to terminate April 3, 1953.

The House agreed to the compromise bill on voice vote Aug. 31. The Senate followed suit the same day and sent it on to the White House. The President signed it Sept. 8 and it became Public Law 771.

Army, Air Force Composition

HR 1437 - P.L. 604

SUMMARY

The official title of P.L. 604 is the "Army and Air Force Authorization Act of 1949". The purpose of the act is to set the maximum strength of the Army and Air Force, fix the maximum number of air groups for the Air Force, and provide the two services with the necessary authority to carry out research and development programs. The act also provides the authority whereby the Army and Air Force may procure supplies and equipment necessary for the fulfillment of their respective military missions.

P.L. 604 was the result of a compromise reached by a Senate-House conference committee June 21, 1950, after a deadlock among the conferees that had lasted almost ten months. This final compromise version of the act was agreed to by the Senate by voice vote June 29, 1950, and by the House by voice vote June 30, 1950. The measure was signed into law by the President July 10, 1950.

Provisions

Under P.L. 604, the Army is authorized to:

1. Have on active duty a total of 837,000 officers and enlisted personnel, including 30,600 commissioned officers and 9,000 warrant officers.

2. Have a National Guard composed of 600,000 officers, warrant officers, and enlisted personnel.

3. Maintain an Organized Reserve Corps consisting of 980,000 officers, warrant officers, and enlisted personnel.

4. Procure all necessary materials and facilities, including guided missiles, for the carrying out of the Army's strategic and tactical tasks.

5. Conduct research and development programs designed to keep the Army supplied with the most modern military supplies and equipment.

Air Force

The Air Force is authorized to:

1. Build up to a maximum of 70 groups, "and such separate United States Air Force squadrons, reserve groups, and supporting and auxiliary United States Air Force and reserve units as may be required".

2. Maintain a personnel strength of 502,000 officers and enlisted men, including 27,500 commissioned officers and 4,800 warrant officers.

3. Maintain an Air National Guard consisting of 150,000 officers and enlisted personnel.

4. Have an Air Force Reserve composed of 500,000 officers and enlisted men.

5. Keep in serviceable condition 24,000 aircraft, or that number of aircraft which would weigh an aggregate of 225,000 airframe tons, whichever ceiling is determined the more appropriate by the Secretary of the Air Force.

6. Procure the aircraft, supplies and equipment, including guided missiles, that are necessary for the Air Force to carry out its mission.

7. Conduct a research and development program designed to provide the Air Force with up-to-date airplanes, accessories, and other materiel required by Air Force units.

Under P.L. 604, the Air Force is not authorized, however, to spend any money for the design or development of prototype aircraft intended primarily for commercial use.

BACKGROUND

The House passed its original version of HR 1437 on March 22, 1949. The Senate passed its version Aug. 27, 1949. A conference committee of five House and five Senate managers was appointed Oct. 3, 1949, to reach a compromise between the two bills. (For the points on which the House and Senate differed, see CQ Almanac, Vol. V, pp. 497-499.)

CONFERENCE

The conference committee completed work on a compromise measure June 21, 1950, and submitted it to the two chambers June 26. The measure was agreed to by the Senate June 29 and by the House June 30.

The provisions of the final bill were not radically different from those in the House-approved measure and in the one originally passed by the Senate. The House bill, for instance, specified a maximum of 70 groups for the Air Force, while the Senate measure referred solely to 24,000 aircraft and 225,000 airframe tons as the alternative maximum. The final version contained all three figures among its provisions.

There was no debate in the lower chamber on the compromise report approved by the conference committee. Within a matter of minutes after it was presented by Rep. Paul Kilday (D Tex.), the measure was agreed to by voice vote.

In the Senate, there was some discussion, but all of it was centered about the question of whether the upper or lower chamber had triumphed when the final bill was made to include provisions calling for both a 70-group Air Force and a ceiling of 24,000 aircraft or whatever number equalled 225,000 tons of airframe weight.

Sen. Millard E. Tydings (D Md.), chairman of the Senate Armed Services Committee, declared it was a victory for the Senate, pointing out that while 70-groups were set as the maximum, the Air Force could not, at the same time, go beyond 225,000 airframe tons. Tydings also pointed out that, regardless of the ceiling figures provided by the act, Congress, because of its power to increase or decrease appropriations each year, had the final say on how large the Air Force would be in any 12-month period.

(See pp. 299 for information on P. L. 655, which affected P. L. 604's provisions regarding the personnel strength of the Army and Air Force. This act was adopted following the start of the Korean War.)

Armed Forces Construction

S 2440 - P. L. 564

SUMMARY

Congress adopted the "Act to authorize certain construction at military and naval installations, and for other purposes" after the measure had been under consideration for almost a year. The Senate Armed Services Committee originally reported S 2440 to the upper chamber August 15, 1949, but it was not until June 12, 1950, that the House, by voice vote, agreed to a compromise version of it, and June 13 that the Senate, by voice vote, concurred.

Under the terms of P. L. 564, which was signed by President Truman June 17, the armed forces are authorized to build facilities of various kinds worth $596 million. As originally conceived by Congressional leaders, appropriations for half this amount were to be included in the 1951 fiscal budget and appropriations for the other half were to be made in the 1952 budget.

Second Installment

As a result of the Korean war, however, Congress provided the second installment of $298 million in HR 9526, the supplemental appropriations bill. (See page 130.)

S 2440 underwent many changes before it was enacted into law, but the two biggest revisions were the elimination, in 1950, of the provision authorizing the military to build family quarters for their personnel within the U. S., and the decision, in 1949, to incorporate certain construction projects in Alaska and Okinawa in a separate bill. (See P. L. 420, CQ Almanac, Vol. V, pages 486-7.)

The elimination of the military housing provision reduced the total amount of money authorized for the armed forces by an estimated $105 million. The removal of a large number of the Alaska and Okinawa projects reduced the amount by $115 million. Authorizations for new facilities were made in 1950, however, thus bringing the sum finally voted almost to $600 million.

Provisions

P. L. 564 consists of four Titles. The first describes in detail the projects which were authorized to be built by the Army. The second describes the projects authorized for the Navy. The third contains a list of the buildings, facilities, and other construction items authorized for the Air Force.

Title IV is a general section that applies with equal force to the projects to be built by all three services. Under its terms:

1. The Army could spend $134 million on its "public works" program.

2. The Navy could spend $221 million.

3. The Air Force could spend $215 million.

4. The Secretaries of the Army, Navy, and Air Force were authorized to spend an additional $25 million if the need arose for projects that had not been specified. The Secretary of the Army could spend $9 million of this emergency total, the Secretary of the Navy $6 million and the Secretary of the Air Force $10 million.

5. The services could increase the cost of any particular project 5 per cent, but they were not permitted to exceed the total figures authorized in the measure.

Domestic Building Barred

6. The services were prohibited from constructing family quarters within the United States, but they were allowed to erect such housing outside the country. They were also permitted to build barracks for unmarried enlisted men, and living quarters for bachelor officers in and outside the U. S.

7. The maximum cost of a dwelling constructed outside the U: S., including site and utilities, was limited to $33,000; the average cost to $29,500. The floor area of such a house was restricted to 1,080 square feet.

8. All military construction authorizations approved by Congress prior to Jan. 1, 1947, were rescinded, except those for which funds had been appropriated by Dec. 31, 1949.

9. The Secretary of Defense was directed to make a report to Congress at the beginning of the first session of the 82nd Congress and at the beginning of the first session of each succeeding Congress, listing the construction projects authorized since Jan., 1947, but not completed because of a lack of funds. The Secretary was to tell Congress which of these projects could be abandoned without harm to the operation of the military establishment.

10. The civilian functions of the Army Corps of Engineers were specifically excluded from the terms of the act.

BACKGROUND

P.L. 564 was enacted because, in the words of Report No. 1851 of the House Armed Services Committee, Congressmen were "gravely concerned as to whether the military services have the physical plant necessary for them to carry out the responsibilities we have placed on them" with the National Security Act of 1947 and other measures. Again according to the report, the armed forces required large sums of money for construction of housing, operational and research facilities. Yet no appropriate legislation had been passed.

There were two military construction bills that were actually reported to Congress in 1949 - HR 4766 and S 2440. HR 4766 was approved by the House Armed Services Committee and submitted to the lower chamber July 23, 1949. However, it was "scratched" at the end of the session because of the enactment of of P.L. 420, the act providing for construction projects of various kinds, including housing for service families, in Alaska and Okinawa. (See CQ Almanac, Vol. 5, page 486.)

As introduced, S 2440 also contained the projects later included in P.L. 420, but it was nevertheless decided to carry this measure over into the second session of the 81st Congress and delete the P.L. 420 items. The House Armed Services Committee for a time considered reporting another House bill, HR 7008. Upon passage by the Senate of S 2440, however, the House group decided to work out its particular views through the Senate-approved bill.

In 1949, Secretary of Defense Louis Johnson urged the enactment of legislation authorizing a large military construction program, setting the cost at $756 million. The Bureau of the Budget, however, reduced this figure to $623 million, suggesting at the same time that Congress appropriate only $430 million for the 1950 fiscal year. As reported to the Senate by the Senate Armed Services Committee in 1949, S 2440 authorized housing, operational and research construction projects that would have cost $634.5 million.

S 2440 came in for an unusual amount of debate when it was considered by the Senate Feb. 3 and 9 in 1950. Controversy was chiefly stirred up by Sen. Paul Douglas (D Ill.) who objected to a provision authorizing the construction of housing for service personnel in the U.S. costing a maximum of $16,500 per dwelling, including site development and utilities.

According to Douglas, this figure was too high. He argued that as mentioned in the measure, the provision was bound to encourage inefficient building practices by contractors who would put up the houses under the terms of the act.

Sen. Millard E. Tydings (D Md.), chairman of the Senate Armed Services Committee, tried to meet Douglas' objections by offering Feb. 3 to amend the bill so that it would include average as well as maximum figures for construction and site development, thus helping to prevent the fraud and extravagance that Douglas feared would develop in the military housing program. The Senate, however, adjourned without taking action on this amendment or, for that matter, on any other amendment, deciding to postpone a decision for a few days.

Senate Reaches Agreement

The Senate returned to S 2440 on Feb. 9, debated it briefly, and then adopted it with these major provisions:

1. The maximum cost of constructing quarters for a service family in the U.S. was kept at $16,500, but the average cost was fixed at $14,750, with $13,000 going for the building of each dwelling and $1,750 for acquision of the land, development of the site, and construction of the necessary utilities.

2. The average cost of building quarters for a service family outside the U.S. was set at twice the figure authorized for construction within the country.

3. The Marine Corps was authorized to build a railroad spur between Camp LeJeune, North Carolina, and Cherry Point, North Carolina, at a cost of $3 million.

4. The Air Force was authorized to transfer Watson Electronics Laboratories from Eatontown, New Jersey, to Griffiss Air Base, Rome, New York, where the Air Force planned to concentrate most of its electronic activities.

5. The services were authorized to spend $498 million on the military construction program. Of this sum, the Army was authorized to spend $108 million, the Navy $173 million, and the Air Force $218 million.

6. A total of $113 million was authorized for family quarters for service personnel; $20 million was permitted for the construction of barracks and quarters for unmarried servicemen.

As passed by the Senate, S 2440 also cancelled all military construction projects that had been authorized prior to the beginning of the 80th Congress, but for which no funds had been appropriated by Dec. 31, 1949. The Secretary of Defense was directed to submit a report at the beginning of the first session of each Congress, starting with the 82nd, regarding the progress of the military construction program.

Final Action

S 2440 was adopted by the upper chamber Feb. 9 by voice vote.

HOUSE

Hearings

The House Armed Services Committee held hearings on the military construction bill from Feb. 8, 1950, to March 24, 1950. It reported S 2440, with amendments, to the House March 27.

During its hearings, the committee received testimony on the necessity for various items in S 2440 from representatives of the different armed services, and from Hubert E. Howard, chairman of the Munitions Board, and W. J. McNeill, Assistant Secretary of Defense.

A great part of the discussion at the committee's hearings centered about the authorizations for family quarters within the U. S. Rep. Carl Vinson (D Ga.), chairman of the House Armed Services Committee, insisted that the witnesses justify every item that related to housing in the bill. According to Vinson, there were doubts among committee members about the advisability of authorizing the armed services to build houses for their personnel.

Wherry Bill Cited

The members felt, Vinson said, that it might be better to have the houses constructed by private contractors, as provided by the Wherry bill, P. L. 211. (P. L. 211, passed in 1949, provided for a $500 million housing insurance fund to stimulate construction of rental housing for service personnel by private industry. See CQ Almanac, Vol. V., page 486, for details of the measure.)

The committee also spent a good deal of time listening to testimony regarding proposals to authorize the Marine Corps to build a railroad spur from Camp Lejeune to Cherry Point, in North Carolina, and to construct a $25 million supply depot somewhere along the eastern coast of the country. It heard a number of witnesses with regard to the Air Force's recommendation that the Watson Electronics Laboratories be moved from Eatontown, N. J., to Griffiss Air Base, Rome, N. Y. People from New Jersey opposed the move, while witnesses from New York favored it.

Report

Despite the fact that Rep. Vinson and others questioned the need for the services to build a large number of homes, instead of private contractors building them under terms of the Wherry Act, the Armed Services Committee unanimously recommended the service-construction provision in the bill it submitted to the House for action March 27.

It made several changes along other lines in the Senate-approved measure, however, and increased the total to be authorized for military construction from $498 million to $688 million.

Major Committee Provisions

The bill approved by the committee contained these major provisions:

1. The Army was authorized to spend $187.5 million on its construction program. The Navy was authorized to spend $243.5 million, the Air Force $257.3 million.

2. The services were authorized to spend a total of $152 million on family housing units, with $96.1 million earmarked for homes in the U. S., and $33 million for dwellings outside the U. S.

3. The Marine Corps was authorized to build a $25 million supply depot, which it had requested before and during the committee hearings.

4. The Marine Corps was also authorized to construct a $3 million railroad from Camp Lejeune to Cherry Point.

Transfer Aspect Omitted

The provision calling for the transfer of Watson Electronics Laboratories from Eatontown, N. J., to Griffiss Air Base, Rome, New York, was left out of the bill principally because a sub-committee had looked into the matter and decided that the Air Force had not offered sufficient justification for the move.

The almost $200 million increase in the amount of money which the services were authorized to spend was due chiefly to a request of the Defense Department. According to department officials, certain projects that had not been included in the bill were highly essential to the proper operation of the services and required construction in either the 1951 or 1952 fiscal year.

The Committee unanimously approved S 2440, with amendments, March 24.

Debate

The House took up S 2440, together with the amendments adopted by the Armed Services Committee, on May 23. The bill was discussed after unanimous adoption of a resolution calling on the chamber to sit as the Committee of the Whole on the measure.

By virtue of a parliamentary device employed by Rep. Vinson, however, the debate took place without the chamber resolving itself into the Committee of the Whole.

The most important action which the House took on the bill was the passage, by voice vote, of a motion to eliminate the Committee provision authorizing the military services to build family quarters for enlisted men and junior officers within the United States.

The motion was approved after Vinson explained to the House that the Rules Committee had objected to the provision when the question of clearing the over-all measure for House action came before that body. Vinson added that his Committee had agreed with the Rules group on this point, and had voted to request that the provision be struck out on the House floor.

Vinson's Opposition

Vinson said the proposal for the armed forces to build military housing in the U. S. was unnecessary. Citing the Wherry Act (P. L. 211), he declared that all the homes that service personnel and their families might need could be built by private enterprise, with some government aid. He added that an amendment to P. L. 211 (P. L. 498. See page 321) had already been passed to make the Wherry Act even more helpful in erecting rental housing on or near military installations in the U. S.

There was little discussion of the other changes the Armed Services Committee suggested in its version of S 2440. A few Congressmen were confused about the amendment to prohibit the armed forces from constructing family quarters in the U. S., thinking that an amendment to strengthen the Wherry Act was being included in the bill in its stead. Several members inquired about the future of the housing situation at installations in their districts or states.

No one, however, objected outright to the military housing amendment or pointed out that the House Armed Services Committee had originally backed the military housing provision. No mention was made of the fact that no fight had apparently been made to keep the provision in the bill, despite the opposition of the leaders of the House Rules Committee.

Rep. Dewey Short (R Mo.), ranking minority member of the House Armed Services Committee, took some time to explain to the House the reasons for setting $33,000 as the maximum, and $29,500 as the average, cost for family quarters for service personnel at installations in Alaska, Okinawa, Newfoundland, and Guam, the four areas covered by the provision relating to military housing outside the U. S.

Explanation by Short

According to Short, the delivery of building materials to installations outside the continental U. S. is expensive, and the conditions under which houses are put up in such places as Alaska and Okinawa are very different from those within this country. The Missouri legislator asserted the ground in some parts of Alaska made it difficult to construct decent basements, and that the weather in Okinawa required the erection of buildings with concrete and steel.

At one point in his discussion of conditions in Alaska, Short made this comment: "American military personnel should not have to live in hovels which rent for $140 a month and at temperatures which sink to 60 degrees below zero."

Short buttressed his argument by citing the visit of the Joint Chiefs of Staff to military installations in Alaska early in 1950. Following this visit, Short told the legislators, the Joint Chiefs issued a report in which American service personnel were described as living under "atrocious" conditions.

Final Action

The House adopted its amended version of S 2440 May 23 by voice vote.

AMENDMENTS AGREED TO

The House, by voice vote, approved these Committee amendments:

1. Limit the maximum cost for a serviceman's house outside the U. S. to $33,000. Limit the average cost to $29,500.

2. Reduce the amount of money authorized for the entire construction program from $688 million to $570 million.

CONFERENCE

Despite the great differences between the Senate and House versions of S 2440, the conference committee appointed by the two chambers agreed unanimously on a compromise bill. Among the committee's actions were:

1. Omission of the provision authorizing the military establishment to build dwelling units for service personnel and their families in the U. S. The Senate had voted for the provision. The House had eliminated it.

2. Approval of the transfer of the Naval Observatory from Washington, D. C., to Charlottesville, Va. The Senate had authorized the transfer, together with an expenditure of $8.5 million for the move. The House had deleted the item.

3. Approval of construction of a Marine Corps supply depot somewhere in the eastern U. S. at a cost of $20 million. The Senate had omitted the provision. The House had voted to authorize the project but had set the cost at $25 million.

4. Omission of the provision authorizing the transfer of the Watson Electronics Laboratories from Eatontown, N. J., to Griffiss Air Base, Rome, N. Y. It was decided that the chairmen of the Senate and House Armed Services Committees would introduce into their respective houses bills covering this proposal and hold hearings on the question. The Senate had voted for the transfer. The House had opposed it. (See story on S 3727, page 317.)

Funds Restored

The committee voted to restore the provision authorizing the Army, Navy and Air Force to spend $9 million, $6 million, and $10 million, respectively, for emergency projects not included in the military construction bill. The Senate had included this clause. The House had taken it out.

The total amount of money authorized by the committee's compromise bill was $596 million, $26 million more than the House bill, and almost $100 million more than the Senate measure.

The conference report was agreed to by the House by voice vote without debate on June 12. It was agreed to by the Senate by voice vote and also with no debate on June 13.

LAW ENACTED

President Truman signed the measure June 17, at which time it became P. L. 564.

LOBBY STANDS

No organization took any particular stand on the military construction bill as a whole. A number, however, did express support for the provision authorizing the services to build family quarters for enlisted men and junior officers in the U. S.

The most important of these groups were the American Federation of Labor, the Congress of Industrial Organizations, and the American Legion. Not one builders' or contractors' association, on the other hand, appeared before either the Senate or House Armed Services Committee to oppose the military housing provision or to argue that private enterprise should do the job. Some of these groups, however, did testify in 1949 before the House and Senate Banking Committees when the Wherry Act (P. L. 211) was under consideration.

Military Justice Code

H R 4080 — P. L. 506

SUMMARY

Designed to reform and unify the court-martial system of the various branches of the armed services, legislation establishing a new uniform code of military justice was passed by the 81st Congress and signed by President Truman May 6, 1950.

This code does not go into effect until May 31, 1951, the delay permitting the Army, Navy, Air Force, and Marine Corps to become familiar with its provisions. It will supplant the current Articles of War of the Army and Air Force, the Articles of Government of the Navy and the Disciplinary Laws of the Coast Guard. It will operate in peace and war.

Although the history of efforts to reform the court-martial systems of the services is almost as old as the systems themselves, Senator Estes Kefauver (D Tenn.), sponsor of the bill in the Senate, pointed out the impetus for reform derived mainly from the two major World Wars.

The effect of widespread criticism of courts-martial during World War II was reflected by the overwhelming support in both houses of the 81st Congress for the bill. Indeed, the only important attempts to amend the bill were to make the code even more flexible for military personnel, particularly the enlisted man.

Morse Is Critic

Chief critic of the bill was Senator Wayne Morse (R Ore.), who maintained that real justice in army courts-martial could never exist so long as commanding officers had control over these courts.

Proponents of the bill claimed the new code will give the GI a better break in military courts. It will permit the enlisted man to demand other enlisted men as members of the court which tries him.

One of the principal innovations is a court of military appeals, to be manned by three civilian judges, to review all cases involving dismissal from the service, long prison terms, or heavy fines.

The legislation, introduced originally as HR 2498 on February 8, 1949, by Carl Vinson (D Ga.), chairman of the House Armed Services Committee, generally followed recommendations of a special committee which had been appointed the previous July by the then-Secretary of Defense, James Forrestal.

Extensive hearings brought legal and veteran officials to testify. Modifications were included in a "clean bill", HR 4080, which was introduced by Rep. Overton Brooks (D La.), and approved unanimously by the Committee April 28.

House Passed in 1949

Only one minor amendment, making dismissal from the service a possible punishment for "conduct unbecoming an officer", was adopted by the House, which passed the bill by a voice vote May 5, 1949. (See CQ Almanac, Vol. V, Page 504.)

The Senate passed the bill February 3, 1950, by a vote of 62 to 9. "Technical and clarifying amendments" were adopted.

The House would not agree to the Senate amendments, and so the differing House and Senate bills were sent to a conference committee for harmonization. The conference group compromised by making minor changes in the House bill.

The Senate accepted the conference committee's compromise on April 25. The House accepted it the following day.

Provisions

The major provisions are:

1. Infliction of limited disciplinary penalties for minor offenses without judicial action.

2. Establishment of pretrial and trial procedure.

3. Creation and constitution of three classes of courts-martial corresponding to those now in existence.

4. Establishment of rules for eligibility of members of each of the courts and the qualifications of its officers and counsel.

5. Review of findings and sentence and the creation and constitution of the reviewing tribunals.

6. Listing and definition of offenses, redrafted and rephrased in modern legislative language.

7. A pre-trial investigation is provided, at which the accused is entitled to be present with counsel to cross-examine available witnesses against him and to present evidence in his own behalf.

8. A prohibition against referring any charge for trial which does not state an offense or is not shown to be supported by sufficient evidence.

9. A mandatory provision for a competent, legally trained counsel at the trial for both the prosecution and the defense.

10. A prohibition against compelling self-incrimination.

11. Provision for equal process to accused and prosecution for obtaining witnesses and depositions and a provision allowing only the accused to use depositions in a capital case.

12. A provision giving an accused enlisted man the privilege of having enlisted men as members of the court trying his case.

13. A provision whereby voting on challenges, findings and sentences is by secret ballot of the members of the court.

14. A provision requiring the law officer to instruct the court on the record concerning the elements of the offense presumption of innocence and the burden of proof.

15. A provision for an automatic review of the trial record for errors of law and of fact by a board of review with the right of the accused to be represented by legally competent counsel.

16. A prohibition against receiving pleas of guilty in capital cases.

17. A provision for the review of the record for errors of law by the civilian Court of Military Appeals. This review is automatic in cases where the sentence is death or involves a general or flag rank officer. A review may be requested by petition on the part of the accused in any sentence involving confinement of one year or more.

18. Provisions of the bill would apply to Reservists only when they are on inactive duty training and voluntarily accept the code.

19. Commanding officers are allowed to keep the privilege of calling for a court-martial without consulting the Judge Advocate General or a higher command.

BACKGROUND

Secretary of Defense James Forrestal in July 1948 appointed an interdepartmental committee, including some recognized legal authorities, to make studies and recommendations for a new code of military justice.

Members of this committee were: Prof. Edmund Morgan Jr., Harvard Law School, chairman; Gordon Gray, Assistant Secretary of the Army; John Kenney, Under-secretary of the Navy; and Eugene Zukert, Assistant Secretary of the Air Force. They were aided by a staff of five civilian lawyers with service experience, and ten representatives of the armed services.

During its seven-month study, the group considered the present military codes and several studies of military and naval justice made in recent years.

Findings and recommendations of the committee were then embodied in a bill (HR 2498) introduced by Rep. Carl Vinson (D Ga.), chairman of the House Armed Services Committee, Feb. 8, 1949.

Forrestal For Bill

The Committee took up the bill March 7 and held 19 days of hearings extending through April 4. Forrestal and an aide, Felix Larkin, led off the testimony, supporting the bill. Prof. Morgan told the committee that his group had tried to "prevent courts-martial from being an instrumentality and agency to express the will of the commander." The bill would, he said, prohibit the commanding officer from censuring the verdict of a court.

Three lawyers — Arthur Farmer, War Veterans Bar Association; Richard Wels, N. Y. County Bar Association; and Frederick Bryan, N.Y.C. Bar Association—told the committee the bill failed to go far enough in preventing possible influence of the military courts by commanding officers. But they felt the bill was "a great improvement" over past efforts to correct the old system.

Also testifying were representatives of the American Veterans Committee, National Guard Bureau, American Legion, Cornell Law School, Marine Corps Reserve Association, AMVETS, American Bar Association, and the armed services.

The bill was modified and re-introduced by Overton Brooks (D La.) April 7 as HR 4080. The clean bill was approved unanimously April 28.

The House took up the bill May 5. Rep. Brooks, floor manager, said, "I cannot assure you that this bill is perfect but I can assure you that it represents the best efforts and conclusions of many sincere and able men."

No Major Opposition

No general opposition to the bill came up during debate. Comments of some major speakers were:

Charles H. Elston (R Ohio) — "I fully endorse the legislation which is before you. I sincerely believe that its enactment will provide the most enlightened system of military justice that has ever been enacted."

Carl Vinson (D Ga.) — "Our problem stems from our desire to create an enlightened system of military justice which not only preserves and protects the rights of the members of our armed forces, but also recognizes the sole reason for the existence of a military establishment — the winning of wars."

Philip J. Philbin (D Mass.)—"This bill provides for the protection of the individual enlisted man or officer at every level and at every point. It regulates and checks arbitrary, capricious and whimsical action of commanding officers at every level and every point."

House Amendments

The bill was passed by voice vote after a minor amendment by Foster Furcolo (D Mass.) was adopted, and two other Furcolo amendments were rejected May 5.

The accepted one provided that punishment for "conduct unbecoming an officer" shall be dismissal from the service or whatever a court-martial shall direct.

The rejected ones provided that a person could not be punished by both a civilian and military court for the same offense, and would have applied a three-year statute of limitation to AWOL cases.

The Senate also completed preliminary work on the bill in 1949. A companion bill to HR 2498 (S 857) was introduced in the Senate Feb. 8 by Millard Tydings (D Md.), chairman of the Senate Armed Services Committee. Hearings were held April 27, May 4, 9 and 27, which paralleled those in the House. HR 4080 as passed by the House, was then substituted for the bill, and it was reported June 10.

Amendments to the bill in the nature of entire substitutes were introduced by Charles W. Tobey (R N. H.), William Langer (R. N. D.) and James P. Kem (R Mo.).

SENATE

The military justice bill did not receive floor action in the Senate until the second session of the 81st Congress, in 1950.

On February 2, 1950, the Senate launched extensive debate of the House bill, and the "clarifying amendments" inserted by the Senate committee.

Senator Kefauver explained the new code would afford more protection for servicemen, by requiring that fellow enlisted men sit on general and special courts-martial. It would also scale down some of the punishments which could be imposed by commanding officers.

A motion to refer the bill to the Judiciary Committee was defeated by a 33 to 43 vote. This motion was made by Sen. Pat McCarran (D Nev.), chairman of the Judiciary Committee, who declared "the bill involves many basic questions of the administration of justice and of judicial rights."

Administration leaders opposed the McCarran amendment, and Senator Saltonstall (R Mass.) a member of the Armed Services Committee, said bills dealing with the same subject in the past had been handled by the military and naval committees of Congress.

"That is one reason we have two sets of justice, one for civilians and one for military," Sen. Wayne Morse (R Ore.) stated.

Morse attempted to insert a single group of amendments designed, he said, to "strip commanding officers of the control they now have over the court-martial system" by depriving them of the power to appoint the courts which function under the military justice procedure.

However, the Morse amendments were rejected by voice vote, and the bill passed the Senate by a vote of 62 to 9.

On the final vote, two Democrats joined seven Republicans to oppose the measure, while 36 Democrats and 26 Republicans united in its favor.

AMENDMENT AGREED TO

Estes Kefauver (D Tenn.) — Provide technical changes including a rewording of some of the language and a renumbering of statutes. By voice vote.

AMENDMENTS REJECTED

Wayne Morse (R Ore.) — Provide limitation on appointing and convening authority of commanding officers, with respect to military courts. Rejected by voice vote.

Pat McCarran (D Nev.)—Motion to refer bill to Judiciary Committee for not more than one month's further study. Rejected, 33-43.

CONFERENCE

The four principal points of disagreement between the House and Senate bills concerned the time limit for bread and water confinement, the tenure of judges for the Court of Military Appeals, separation of the crime of larceny, and a reduction of qualifications for the Judge Advocates General.

The House accepted the Senate's three-day limit for confinement on bread and water or reduced rations, a punishment to apply to military personnel attached to a ship. It had previously reduced the old seven-day limit to five.

Differences in the tenure of the three judges to be appointed from civilian life by the President were also ironed out in conference.

The House bill had called for life appointments. The Senate reduced the tenure from life to 8 years. The conference agreement provides that judges of the Court of Military Appeals shall be appointed for a term of 15 years, the first appointees to receive staggered terms of 5, 10, and 15 years respectively, the first expiring May 1, 1956, the second on May 1, 1961, and the third one on May 1, 1966, with terms of all successors to be a full 15-year term.

Contributory civil-service retirement provisions was also accepted for the judges.

The conference also accepted the Senate's provision about larceny, specifying a separate offense for wrongful taking of property without intent to deprive a person of his property permanently. This distinction making a wrongful appropriation of property a lesser crime than deliberate intent of personal deprivation was made because a conviction of larceny in the armed services is a serious offense.

The House also accepted the Senate reduction in requirements for the Judge Advocates General, allowing a person to qualify for appointment to this position if he were a member of the bar of a Federal court of a State or Territory and had not less than 8 years experience in legal duties as a commissioned officer.

Both Houses accepted the conference report by voice vote, the Senate adopting it on April 25 and the House on April 26.

LAW ENACTED

President Truman signed the bill on May 6 but it will not become law until May 31, 1951, enabling the Army, Navy, Air Force, and Marine Corps to become familiar with the provisions before putting them into operation.

In signing the legislation, President Truman said: "The code is an outstanding example of unification in the armed forces, and is tangible evidence of the achievements made possible by the teamwork of the Army, the Navy, the Air Force, the Marine Corps and the Coast Guard. Under the provisions of this uniform and modern code, the democratic ideal of equality before the law is further advanced."

Secretary of Defense Louis Johnson said the code contains "a number of very desirable protections for the accused without interfering with necessary military functions."

LOBBIES

Spokesmen for the American Bar Association and other legal organizations appeared before the 1949 Senate hearings, urging that the committee go further in preventing "command control" of the courts.

George A. Spiegelberg, chairman, special committee on military justice, of the American Bar Association, stated that the bill permitted the commanding officer who appoints the court to let it be known what he wants done.

Representatives of the following groups also testified during hearings: American Veterans Committee, National Guard Bureau, American Legion, AMVETS, Marine Corps Reserve Officers Association, Reserve Officers Association of the United States, and the Veterans of Foreign Wars.

All of them felt the bill was "a great improvement" over the prevailing system.

Enlistment Of Aliens

S 2269 - P.L. 597

SUMMARY

President Truman signed P. L. 597 June 30, eight days after the bill had been passed with amendments by the House on a 201-84 ballot, and seven days after the revised measure had been agreed to by the Senate, by a voice vote.

The purpose of P. L. 597 is to authorize the Army to secure the enlistment, between June 30, 1950, and June 30, 1953, of a maximum of 2,500 aliens. All who join the armed forces under this act will be eligible for American citizenship if they have served honorably at least five years and have then been permitted to enter this country.

The act provides that the 2,500 aliens be spread out among different Army units and not kept together as a kind of "Foreign Legion." All foreigners accepted for active duty under this law must be living abroad at the time of acceptance and must possess linguistic or some other highly technical qualification. They must be between 18 and 35 years of age, male, unmarried, and without dependents.

BACKGROUND

S 2269 originally passed the Senate on voice vote in 1949 during the first session of the 81st Congress. It was introduced July 15, 1949 by Sen. Henry Cabot Lodge (R Mass.), who had sponsored a similar measure in the 80th Congress. This bill had been tacked on to the Selective Service Act as an amendment and was passed by the upper chamber in that form. It was removed from the Selective Service measure, however, in conference.

The measure that was adopted by the Senate differed in several important respects from the one that was passed by the House and ultimately agreed to by the upper chamber.

First of all, the original Senate measure would have authorized the enlistment in the U. S. Army of 10,000 aliens; the House bill provided for 2,500. The original Senate measure made no mention of integrating the alien soldiers into different military units so that the taint of a "Foreign Legion" would be avoided; the House bill did. The original Senate measure authorized enlistments up to June 30, 1951; the House bill extended the period to June 30, 1953.

Although the original form of S 2269 was adopted by the Senate in 1949, it was not the first measure on the subject to be considered by the upper chamber in that session.

On January 10, 1949, Lodge had submitted a bill calling for the enlistment of 25,000 aliens in the Regular Army. But this measure (S 273) was rejected by the Senate Armed Services Committee and completely rewritten.

S 2269 — the product of the rewriting — was passed by the Senate by unanimous consent August 27, 1949, after having been favorably reported by the Senate Armed Services Committee August 22.

HOUSE

Committee

The House Armed Services Committee approved its revised form of S 2269 May 25, 1950, after hearing testimony on the measure by, among others, Sen. Lodge and Gen. J. Lawton Collins, Chief of Staff of the Army. Both witnesses urged adoption of the bill, with Collins stating that the Army could use the services of persons who knew foreign languages and had an intimate acquaintance with the terrain, customs, and true conditions of foreign countries.

Debate

The bill met with opposition from Congressmen on both sides of the aisle when the House debated the resolution calling the measure up for floor action. Rep. John E. Rankin (D Miss.) argued that the bill would enable spies to join the U. S. Army and learn many important secrets about the country's military operations. Rep. Boyd Tackett (D Ark.) said that there was no need to hire "mercenaries" and then permit them to become American citizens upon the completion of five or more years of service. Rep. Leo Allen (R Ill.) felt it would be an insult to American GI's to have them serve under those aliens who rose through the ranks and came to occupy positions of importance.

The resolution was adopted, however, by a roll-call vote of 232-61.

The debate in the Committee of the Whole, where the measure was then considered, was similar to the House discussion on the rule. But it also produced statements that the bill's purpose was to employ people who would spy for the U. S., though Rep. Carl Vinson, chairman of the House Armed Services Committee, denied this.

Rep. Dewey Short (R Mo.), a strong supporter of the legislation, declared that the aliens who enlisted would help the Army in many ways in another war. He also declared:

"Let us be honest. This is a dirty business, but war is dirty. It is a dangerous business, but war is dangerous. So while I was inclined at the beginning to vigorously oppose this bill, and while there are aspects to it that are repugnant to the conscience of any decent human being, I am convinced, after we sat on the bill and after we heard the representatives of both the State and Defense Departments, the bill should be passed."

Opposition

Rep. Robert F. Rich (R Pa.) opposed a provision requiring Secretary of State to approve the details of the program as it was being carried out. Rep. Vinson offered an amendment striking from the measure any mention of the State Department. This move was defeated, however, after Rep. Karl Stefan (R Neb.) contended that, regardless of what the House thought of various officials in the department, it would be setting a bad precedent to prevent the department from co-operating with the Army in screening aliens applying for enlistment in the armed forces.

Final Action

S 2269, with the amendments suggested by the House Armed Services Committee, was passed by the House June 22 by a roll-call vote of 201 to 84. This revised measure was agreed to by the Senate by voice vote June 23.

Shortly after the start of the war in Korea, the act figured briefly in the news with calls by several legislators for the enlistment in the American Army of people from Japan, China, and the Philippines. Sen. Harry P. Cain (R Wash.), for instance, stated, "If this is truly a joint effort to stop communism in its tracks in North Korea, then the sooner we get some select and trained men from these people, the better."

Cain, for one, felt compelled to make his request for the enlistment of Asiatics because P. L. 597 was unofficially intended to authorize the use of men from Europe, especially those from the Iron Curtain countries.

Veterans Postal Pay

HR 87—VETOED

SUMMARY

A Presidential veto June 23, 1950, ultimately killed a bill (HR 87) to give World War II veterans employed by the Post Office Department salary and promotion credit for time they had spent in the armed forces. In final form the legislation would have cost the federal government an estimated $163 million had it become law.

The House voted June 26, 1950, to override the veto. The vote was 213-72. However, Senate supporters failed by four to muster the necessary majority to override. The Senate voted Aug. 31, 1950, to override, 48 to 29, but lacked the required margin, so the veto killed the bill.

The legislation would have given veterans who entered the postal service after World War II and before June 30, 1950, salary and promotion credits for time spent in the armed forces. This would have meant grade advancements and pay increases of $100 annually for each year spent in the armed forces. It also contained a provision making retroactive, for purposes of determining salaries, promotion of substitute postal employees to regular status where they failed to receive advancement because they were in the armed forces.

Supporters maintained the legislation corresponded to that enacted after World War I and that it granted veterans who joined the postal service after the war privileges already given to those who left it to serve in the armed forces and then returned. It was favored by postal unions and received bipartisan support.

In his veto message, the President said the bill would discriminate against veterans in other federal departments, was not true veterans legislation because it benefited fewer than 100,000 of the 15 million veterans, and would further increase the Post Office deficit. Federal agencies —the Post Office Department, Bureau of the Budget, Civil Service Commission — had objected to the bill on similar grounds.

The House amended the bill to eliminate an additional automatic boost of four grades for such veterans. The provision eliminated would have meant annual increases of $400, plus the $100 for each year of service, or a possible annual increase of $800. It would have increased the total estimated cost of the legislation to about $454 million over a period of eight years.

The committee, in recommending elimination of the provision, pointed out that after it reported the bill favorably the House passed a postal salary bill that gave all employees an increase of $120 a year and eliminated the first two grades.

The House passed HR 87 March 8, 1950, but rejected amendments that would have extended its provisions to veterans in other departments and to postmasters. It also refused to eliminate the cutoff date of June 30, 1950, which was criticized as discriminatory.

The Senate had passed a similar but not identical bill (S 689) Aug. 9, 1949. It passed HR 87 on a voice vote and without debate, June 8, 1950.

Provisions

The vetoed legislation would have:

1. Provided that classified postal employees and substitutes who are World War II veterans and who entered the postal service prior to July 1, 1950, receive credit on a pro rata basis for each year in the armed services in determining their salary grade and promotions. Excluded were those who had reached the maximum salary grade or had already received credit for time spent in the armed forces.

2. Provided that substitute employees who failed of promotion to regular status because they were in the armed forces be held to have been promoted as of the date a vacancy occurred to which they could have been promoted.

3. Made the bill's provisions effective only from the date of the act, eliminating any retroactive claims.

4. Set the dates of World War II, for the purposes of the bill, as Sept. 16, 1940, to June 30, 1946, inclusive.

Votes

The House March 8, 1950, passed by a division vote, 176 to 18, the bill (HR 87) to grant World War II veterans salary and promotion credit for time spent in the armed forces.

The Senate passed the bill June 8, 1950, on a voice vote.

President Truman vetoed the bill, June 23, 1950.

The House voted to override the veto, June 26, 1950, on a roll-call vote of 213-72. (See p. 356.)

The Senate Aug. 31, 1950, voted to override but fell four votes short of the necessary majority, 48 to 29. (See p. 354.)

HOUSE

The House March 8, 1950, debated HR 87, intended to grant promotion and salary credit to World War II veterans who joined the Postal Service after discharge and before July 1, 1950.

Extensive amendment of the bill was recommended by the Post Office and Civil Service Committee when it reported the measure, with a recommendation for passage, at the first session, July 12, 1949.

When the House took up the bill however, Chairman Tom Murray (D Tenn.), chairman of the Committee, said the bill was discriminatory because of its cut off date and because it did not extend like benefits to veterans who became post-war employees of other federal agencies. He said the Budget Bureau, Post Office Department and Civil Service Commission all opposed the measure.

The bill and several attempts to amend it occasioned considerable debate. As reported, the bill would have authorized pay grade advances that would have cost an estimated 454 million dollars.

For the Committee, Murray offered a successful amendment that eliminated a section giving veterans an automatic advance of four pay grades in addition to other pay gains. The amended version retained provisions for pay grade advancements to compensate for service time. Murray said the amendment reduced the overall cost of the legislation to $163 million. Vote on the amendment was 110-0.

The House also agreed to an amendment fixing the dates of World War II for the purposes of the bill.

Several other amendments and a motion to kill the bill were unsuccessful. Murray attempted to amend it to grant similar benefits to veterans who were post-war employees of other federal agencies and to postmasters, but was unsuccessful.

Also rejected was an amendment to eliminate a phrase limiting the grade advancements to veterans hired before July 1, 1950. The attempt to kill the bill through a motion to strike the enacting clause lost on a division, 39-70.

Final Vote

The House, which had been considering the legislation as a Committee of the Whole, then arose and passed the amended measure on a division vote, 176 to 18.

AMENDMENTS AGREED TO

Tom Murray (D Tenn.) — Drop automatic extra boost of four grades. Division vote 110-0.

Murray — Fix date of World War II, for purposes of the act, as Sept. 16, 1940, to June 30, 1946. Voice.

AMENDMENTS REJECTED

Pat Sutton (D Tenn.) — Remove cut off date. Division 9-60.

Murray — Give service credit to all federal employees. Division 76-64, then rejected on teller vote 62-83.

Murray — Give service credit to postmasters. Division 46-57.

SENATE

The Senate Committee on Post Office and Civil Service April 18, 1950, reported with a favorable recommendation H R 87, relating to promotion of World War II veterans in the field service of the Post Office Department.

The Committee noted that the bill's purpose — to permit certain postal employees to receive credit for field service — was the same as that of a similar but not identical bill, S 689, which the Senate passed Aug. 9, 1949. (CQ Almanac, 1949, p. 506)

After a brief explanation of its provisions, the Senate passed H R 87, providing advancement for some veterans employed by the Post Office Department, on a voice vote, June 8, 1950, and the measure went to the President.

VETO

The President vetoed HR 87 on June 23.

In vetoing the measure, the President said:

1. Pay increases ($100 for each year of military service) would go to persons who were not in the Post Office Department before their service.

2. The bill would discriminate against servicemen working in other departments.

3. It is not a "veterans' benefit bill" as it applied to fewer than 100,000 of the 15 million World War II veterans.

4. Its $163 million cost would further increase the Post Office deficit.

HOUSE OVERRIDES

The House June 26, 1950, voted to override the Presidential veto. Vote was 213-72 on roll call. A two-thirds majority was needed to override the veto.

There was no debate on the veto. Tom Murray (D Tenn.), chairman of the Post Office and Civil Service Committee, moved that the bill be sent back to his Committee. His motion lost on roll call 115-165. Then the vote was taken on overriding the veto. (Votes, p. 356.) The bill then was sent to the Senate.

SENATE SUSTAINS

Falling four votes short of the two-thirds majority required to override a veto, the Senate Aug. 31, 1950, sustained President Truman's veto of HR 87.

The Senate voted 48 to 29 to override. (Votes, p. 354.) Although a majority of Senators present and voting favored overriding, they lacked the necessary margin and the veto consequently stood.

In brief debate preceding the ballot on the veto, Sen. Olin D. Johnston (D S.C.), Chairman of the Senate Post Office and Civil Service Committee, and Sen. William Langer (R N.D.), ranking GOP member, pressed for passing the measure despite the President's objections. They said similar legislation was enacted after World War I.

Speaking against the bill, and urging that the veto be sustained, Sens. Richard B. Russell, (D Ga.) and Harry Flood Byrd (D Va.) said the measure would put an undue strain on the budget, and would open the door to a flood of similar preferential-treatment bills.

LOBBY STANDS

Generally postal unions favored and federal agencies opposed the bill (HR 87) to give salary credit for time spent in the armed forces to World War II veterans now employed by the Post Office Department.

At a rally held by four postal unions at the Statler Hotel Jan. 29, 1950, Republican and Democratic legislators pledged support for the bill. It was passed by both houses but died when Senate supporters failed by four to rally enough favorable votes to override the veto. The House had voted to override.

Tom Murray, chairman of the Post Office and Civil Service Committee, told the House the Post Office Department, Civil Service Commission and Bureau of the Budget all opposed the bill.

The Budget Bureau said it would confer discriminatory advantages to a specially limited class and thus be "harmful in its over-all effect upon the federal employee system".

"The granting of credit for military service to those employees who had no postal experience prior to their entrance into service distorts the proper relationship between their capabilities and the amount of salaries paid them," Murray quoted the Post Office Department as saying.

The Civil Service Commission said the "basic objection to the bill" was that "it is not in accordance with the established principle that increase in pay should be granted for demonstrated performance of satisfactory service."

Universal Military Training

S 4062

SUMMARY

As he had in previous years, President Truman asked Congress in 1950 to enact legislation providing universal military training for the nation's youths. And as it had done in previous years, the Congress ignored Mr. Truman's request at the beginning.

After the outbreak of the Korean war, however, Mr. Truman renewed his requests for UMT, and the Senate held hearings on a bill (S 4062) which would have authorized it. Before the measure was reported to the Senate by the Armed Services Committee, however, the President decided to ask Congress to postpone action until 1951. The Congress complied. The House never opened hearings on the program.

The proposed UMT bill would have provided for compulsory training of every healthy youth between 17 and 20 years of age for a period of six months. After the six months had been served, the trainees would be given the option of joining a regular branch of the Service or the Reserves of any Service. Trainees would not be under military discipline during training, and could not be used for combat. A special civilian agency would administer the program.

A detailed "Code of Conduct" was also set forth in the bill. This Code would have supplanted the regular armed forces "Articles of War" where trainees were concerned.

BACKGROUND

The 80th Congress had considered UMT legislation in 1948 that was virtually identical with the legislation before the 81st Congress in 1950. But, as was the case with the later bill, the earlier version failed to become law, even though the topic received more action in 1948 than Congress gave it in 1950. (See CQ Almanac, Vol. IV, page 235, for history of 1948 legislation.)

In 1949, President Truman renewed earlier requests for UMT, but the new, Democratic-controlled Congress ignored them. No hearings on UMT were held in either house.

The President returned to the attack in 1950. A few days after the Congress reconvened for its second session, the President called for UMT in his Budget message. He did not submit a budgetary request, but indicated that a UMT program — if enacted — would cost an estimated $800 million.

But it appeared that once again Congress was going to cold-shoulder Mr. Truman's request. His proposal for UMT was not converted to legislative form. No bill embodying it was introduced.

Discussed Obliquely

The topic, however, drew comment in Congress in connection with other measures considered. In January, when the House Armed Services Committee was holding hearings on extension of the draft, the Women's International League for Peace and Freedom made strong depositions against any form of UMT. The Indiana Council of Churches also spoke against UMT when testifying before the House body. The American Legion, however, testified strongly in support of UMT.

After the Joint Committee on Atomic Energy opened hearings on civilian defense on March 17, a spokesman of the American Legion's Civil Defense Committee urged on March 20 that UMT should be enacted as one method of helping the nation prepare against the impact of atomic attack.

After the outbreak of the Korean war, the Senate Armed Services Committee studying suspension of short, one-term enlistments heard Rear Admiral H. A. Houser testify Aug. 10 that the Defense Department was drawing up a UMT program. Committee members suggested that perhaps the UMT program could take the place of the short hitches.

Program Submitted

On the night of Aug. 16, Secretary of Defense Louis Johnson forwarded his agency's program to Chairman Millard Tydings (D Md.) of the Senate Armed Services group and to Chairman Carl Vinson (D Ga.) of the House Armed Services body. In letters of transmittal, Johnson noted that "recent events in Korea have only served to emphasize the fact that universal training is an essential element of an integrated and balanced system of national security." UMT, he said, was the "only means of providing on a continuing basis sufficient numbers of men for the reserve forces."

Johnson indicated, moreover, that he would be glad to get UMT on a "stand-by" basis if not on a permanent one.

On Aug. 17, President Truman told his press conference that he had given Johnson the green-light to submit the UMT program. But the President reiterated his own comments of a week before that he did not want Congress to consider UMT to the exclusion of other, more immediately pressing measures.

SENATE

Chairman Millard Tydings (D Md.) of the Senate Armed Services Committee on Aug. 17 introduced legislation (S 4062) embodying the Defense Department's universal military training program. In a speech on the Senate floor, Tydings said he was endorsing the plan because it was justified by "tragic experiences in Korea."

Sens. Chan Gurney (R S. D.), Harry F. Byrd (D Va.) and Edward Thye (R Minn.) spoke in favor of the program. Sen. Lester C. Hunt (D Wyo.) also favored UMT itself, but said he went along with the President's comment that consideration of UMT should not be permitted to deflect Congress from action on other more pressing problems.

Hearings

Tydings opened hearings on S 4062 on Aug. 22. The first witness was Secretary Johnson, who told the Committee that UMT could not be used immediately, but that enactment of a stand-by program would have a psychological effect abroad "of incalculable value to the cause of world peace."

Gen. Omar N. Bradley, chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, also endorsed the bill. He said it would be the most efficient way of maintaining a manpower pool in future years. Maj. Gen. Lewis B. Hershey, director of Selective Service, appeared Aug. 23 to back the bill. He said the draft was needed to care for immediate problems, but said UMT would be necessary in the future.

Also appearing in favor of the bill Aug. 23 were representatives of the Amvets, Jewish War Veterans, National Guard Association, and Reserve Officers Association.

Several persons testified against the measure Aug. 23. James Finucane, associate secretary of the National Council for the Prevention of War, said UMT would be of no use in the Korean war, and as a postwar program would corrupt the nation's youth. The program would be, he said, a "boondoggle, bossed by buxom peacetime colonels."

Other groups opposing the bill before the committee were the Women's Christian Temperance Union, Mennonite Central Committee and National Service Board for Religious Objectors.

After a cumulative total of four hours of hearings, Chairman Tydings closed hearings on Aug. 23. No criticism of the idea of UMT was voiced by any of the Committee members.

Final Action

Tydings and Chairman Carl Vinson (D Ga.) of the House Armed Services Committee, called on the President August 29 to confer on the UMT program. In a letter to both committees later the same day, Truman said, UMT was a long-range program which would handicap the short-handed Army during Korean fighting. He said he favored UMT and would like it on the books for use when military instructors became available. But right then, he added, Congress was too busy on defense legislation needed immediately, and he suggested the UMT bill be put off.

Congress complied with the President's request. The Tydings group voted 8-3 on Aug. 30 to postpone further action on S 4062. Tydings then appointed Sens. Lyndon Johnson (D Tex.), Virgil Chapman (D Ky.), Estes Kefauver (D Tenn.), Lester C. Hunt (D Wyo.), Styles Bridges (R N.H.), Leverett Saltonstall (R Mass.) and Wayne Morse (R Ore.) to a special subcommittee to study UMT and prepare a detailed plan on it to guide Congressional action in 1951.

On Oct. 17, the group, headed by Johnson, made its report.

In addition to providing soldiers, their recommended plan would guarantee a reserve of defense employees and civil defense workers. Johnson said it had been placed before the President with a request he order federal agencies to help in shaping the program. Johnson also said hearings would be held in January.

Tentatively the program called for compulsory training for all physically fit youths in a joint Army-Navy-Air Force indoctrination program. Rejected youths, if still unfit for military service after treatment, would be trained for necessary defense work.

The only major UMT development after issuance of the Johnson group's plan came from the President. On Oct. 25, Mr. Truman, in an informal talk to the National Guard Association, called the heavy draft rejection rate then prevailing most "disgraceful" but said that "a universal training program would eradicate" the complaint.

He urged the Association to get behind a UMT plan and push for its enactment in Congress.

LOBBY STANDS

In addition to those organizations which sent representatives to testify at the Senate Armed Services Committee's hearings on S 4062, these were groups taking stands:

For UMT: U. S. Chamber of Commerce, Adjutants General Association of the U. S., Gold Star Wives of America, Inc., VFW and the Marine Corps. Reserve Officers Association.

Against UMT: The Brethren Service Commission.

In addition, the Committee Against Jim Crow in Military Service and Training said it supported UMT, but insisted on certain civil rights safeguards being written into the bill. The American Veterans Committee said it could neither favor nor oppose UMT until its member chapters had re-evaluated the situation.

Coast Guard Draft

SUMMARY

President Truman Sept. 27, 1950, signed a bill (S 4136) to permit men to be inducted into the Coast Guard under the provisions of the Selective Service Law. The bill became Public Law 850.

The Treasury, which has jurisdiction over the Coast Guard in peace time, requested the legistation because the Coast Guard's responsibilities had been increased by passage of a law authorizing inspection of foreign ships. (See page 318). Under S 4136, the Coast Guard, which previously depended on voluntary enlistments, was authorized also to obtain men through Selective Service on the same basis as the Army, Navy, Air Force and Marines.

The new law gave the Coast Guard authority to call up its reserves, and authorized the President to extend for 12 months the existing terms of enlistment.

SENATE

The Senate Armed Services Committee Sept. 7, 1950, heard Edward H. Foley Jr., Under Secretary of the Treasury, urge enactment of S 4136 to extend provisions of the Selective Service Act. of 1948 to the Coast Guard.

Foley said additional port security duties under the Magnuson Act, which became law Aug. 9, 1950, made it necessary to insure adequate personnel for the Coast Guard. The only other witness at the hearing, Maj. Gen. Lewis B. Hershey, Selective Service Director, said his agency favored the bill and "we can operate it, I think".

The Committee reported the bill Sept. 7, 1950, with a recommendation for passage. The Senate passed the bill Sept. 13, 1950.

HOUSE

The House Armed Services Committee Sept. 14, 1950, also approved S 4136, after Vice Adm. Merlin O'Neill, Coast Guard Commandant, also asserted that the Coast Guard's responsibilities had been greatly increased by the Magnuson Act.

Two amendments were approved by the Committee. They permitted inductees to volunteer after being classified instead of waiting for a call-up, and gave local draft boards authority to divide into panels to hear cases.

The House passed the bill, as amended by its Committee, Sept. 14, 1950.

LAW ENACTED

The Senate concurred in the House amendments Sept. 18, 1950, clearing the bill to the President. On Sept. 27, 1950, he signed it into law.

George C. Marshall Exemption Act

HR 9646—P.L. 788

SUMMARY

The House and Senate Sept. 15 gave final approval to a special bill (HR 9646) which would allow Gen. George C. Marshall to be appointed as Secretary of Defense. The President signed the bill Sept. 18 and submitted Marshall's appointment to the Senate for confirmation. The Senate confirmed Marshall Sept. 20 (see P. 355).

The bill set aside a provision in the National Security Act (Unification Act) of 1947 barring from the post of Secretary of Defense any person who had served as an officer in the Armed Forces during the past ten years. The exemption applies only to Marshall. The bill fixed Marshall's pay as his Army retirement pay plus the amount over that figure ordinarily paid a Cabinet member.

HOUSE

The House Armed Services Committee approved the bill 18-7 Sept. 15. The House approved it that afternoon on roll-call vote 220-105. Favoring the bill were 193 Democrats and 27 Republicans; opposing it were five Democrats and 100 Republicans. (See P. 358 for vote.)

Carl Vinson (D Ga)., chairman of the House Armed Services Committee supported the bill on the floor. He told the House: "As contrasted with practically any other person in America, and, in my judgment, to a greater extent than any other available person at this critical moment, General Marshall can undertake this vast responsibility and, without the slightest postponement of urgently needed defense programs now under way, get the defense effort on a steady keel and carry it through with efficiency and dispatch."

Opposition came from Representatives who disapproved a change in the policy of barring professional military men from the Defense Secretaryship, and from members who were critical of Marshall's China policy opinions. Frederick R. Coudert, Jr. (R N.Y.) said he had the highest admiration" for Marshall as a soldier, but insisted that "no one man in 150 million Americans is indispensable, certainly not a 70-year-old man with one kidney who has given 'the best of his life'" before retirement.

Three amendments were offered. James G. Fulton, (R Pa.) moved to authorize the appointment of Rep. Vinson as Secretary of Defense in place of Marshall. But Vinson made a point of order that the amendment was not germane to the bill, and the presiding officer ruled out the amendment. An amendment by Dewey Short (R Mo.) to limit Marshall's appointment to one year was voted down 61-136 on a standing vote. An amendment by Jacob K. Javits (R N.Y.) rewording a statement in the bill reaffirming Congress' intent that the Defense Department should ordinarily be headed by a civilian was rejected on voice vote.

Motions by Clare Hoffman (R Mich.) and Paul W. Shafer (R Mich.) to send the bill back to committee (in effect, killing the measure) were defeated on voice votes. The bill was then passed 220-105 on roll call and sent to the Senate.

SENATE

The Senate Armed Services Committee reported a similar bill, S 4147, by a vote of 10-2 Sept. 13. Harry P. Cain (R Wash.) and William Knowland (R Calif.) who voted against reporting the bill, filed a minority report saying the job should go to a civilian, no matter how well qualified Marshall was.

The Senate took up the measure Sept. 15. Debate followed the House pattern. Harry F. Byrd (D Va.) backed the bill, saying, "Besieged as we are, by perils on every side, I feel it is our obligation, as representatives of the people, to place in this position of authority a man who, above all others, is best capable to perform the duties of Secretary of Defense." General Marshall, he said, fits that description.

William Knowland (R Calif.) opposed the bill, not, he said, because of lack of confidence in Gen. Marshall, but because the job should go to a qualified civilian. Knowland pointed out that the bill would put a five-star general over the civilian heads of the Army, Navy, and Air Force.

William E. Jenner (R Ind.) attacked Marshall personally, saying, "General Marshall is not only willing, he is eager to play the role of a front man, for traitors. The truth is this is no new role for him, for Gen. George C. Marshall is a living lie." The attack was sharply criticized by Leverett Saltonstall (R Mass.) and Scott W. Lucas (D Ill.), who said Marshall, personally, is "above censure".

Harry P. Cain (R Wash.) and Bourke B. Hickenlooper (R Iowa) scored Marshall for his China policy stands during his tenure as Secretary of State. They said Marshall's policy had aided communism.

On completion of debate the Senate set aside its own bill and passed, without amendment, HR 9646 which had passed the House the same day.

Final Senate approval was 47-21 on roll call. Democrats voted 37-1 for the bill; Republicans opposed it 10-20. (See P. 355 for vote.)

Doctors and Dentists Draft

SUMMARY

Voluntary enlistments of doctors and dentists did not keep up with Armed Forces expansion when the Korean war started, so the Defense Department asked that medical men be brought under the draft law. Similar bills were introduced in the House (HR 9554) and Senate (S 4029) to carry out this suggestion.

The American Medical Association and the American Dental Association both endorsed the plan. The Senate Armed Services Committee approved the Senate bill Aug. 28; the House Armed Services Committee reported its bill Aug. 29.

The Senate passed its own measure without amendment Aug. 29; the House approved its bill Aug. 30 on a 363-1 roll-call vote. A conference ironed out differences without delay, and both houses approved the final version Sept. 1. The President signed it Sept. 9 and it became Public Law No. 779.

Provisions

The bill contained the following major provisions:

All doctors, dentists and allied specialists, not in the Reserves, under the age of 50 shall be brought under the Selective Service law.

They shall serve not more than 21 months active duty if drafted under that law.

The following priorities for call-up shall be provided: First the former students who received part or all of their training at government expense but who had less than 90 days active service in the last war; Second those with more than 90 days but less than 21 months; next those who got their training at other than government expense but who never served in the armed forces or public health service; and finally those who got their training at other than government expense but who served. Those called first from this group would be the ones having the least active service.

"Allied specialists" shall include pharmacists, osteopaths, veterinarians and optometrists, but shall not exclude other categories.

A National Advisory Committee of doctors, dentists and scientists shall be set up to advise the Selective Service System and coordinate work of state and local advisory committees.

Drafted doctors, etc., shall not be entitled to the $100 monthly bonus paid volunteer medical men.

SENATE

Chan Gurney (R S. D.) introduced a doctor-draft bill (S 4029) Aug. 9 calling for registration of all medical men under 45. Testimony on the measure was taken by the Senate Armed Services Committee Aug. 22. Representatives of the American Medical Association and American Dental Association endorsed the bill in general. They said it would be fair to the medical profession to require service first by non-veteran, government-trained men.

Representatives of the medical arms of the three Armed Services endorsed the bill and said that more doctors were needed than were volunteering.

The bill was rewritten and approved Aug. 28. The new bill raised the age limit of doctors to 55 and specified that draftees would receive the $100, a-month extra pay. Other provisions were similar to the final Act.

The Senate took up the measure Aug. 29 and passed it without a dissenting voice. Debate was confined to a brief explanation of the measure and a few remarks critical of what Kenneth S. Wherry (R Neb.) said was a policy of using briefly-trained men in the Korean war. It passed by voice vote.

HOUSE

Several bills, including HR 9294, HR 9311, HR 9327 and HR 9358, all providing for a draft of doctors, dentists and allied specialists, were introduced in the House. These were rewritten by Chairman Carl Vinson (D Ga.) of the House Armed Services Committee and submitted Aug. 26 as HR 9554.

Testimony on the bill was similar to that received in the Senate. One major amendment was added by the Committee on a 15-3 vote, making drafted medical men ineligible for the $100 extra pay granted volunteers. The bill was reported Aug. 29.

The House acted Aug. 30, passing the bill after a short discussion. One amendment, by John P. Saylor (R Pa.), which boosted the top age of draftees from 45 to 50 years, carried on voice vote. The bill then was passed 363-1 on roll call with Vito Marcantonio (ALP N.Y.) voting "no". (Vote, p. 358)

CONFERENCE

Conferees agreed Aug. 31 to a compromise which kept most of the House-approved provisions. The House passed the conference report by voice vote Sept. 1; the Senate followed suit the same day. The President signed it Sept. 5, and it became Public Law No. 779.

Spanish-American War Veterans

Enacted Over Veto

The first measure of general interest to be written into law by the 81st Congress over President Truman's objections was enacted Sept. 19 when the Senate, a veto notwithstanding, approved the bill (HR 6217) providing additional free medical service for Spanish-American war veterans. The Senate roll-call vote was 58 to 3.

Just before, on Sept. 14, the House voted 321 to 12 to overturn the President's disapproval of the bill. In both cases the veto was overridden by far more than the required two-thirds majority of those voting.

(Prior to the Sept. 19 action, the 81st Congress had enacted into law over the President's veto a private claims bill. CQ Almanac, Vol. V, p. 577.)

The war veterans aid bill would have required the government to provide out-patient (clinic) treatment for the surviving 118,000 Spanish-American veterans, as well as veterans of the Boxer Rebellion and the Philippine Insurrection, on the same basis treatment is now provided these veterans who have service-connected disabilities.

The President, in vetoing the measure, said it would "set a most undesirable precedent for the future."

Urging the Senate to override the veto, Sen. Lister Hill (D Ala.) said the concern of the President was "not well justified" when the benefits available to Spanish-American war veterans were compared to those provided for veterans of World Wars I and II. Sen. Edward Martin (R Pa.), himself a veteran of that war, said the bill should be enacted "in justice to a group of men who pioneered in a way which helped us to win two world wars."

Initial Passage

HR 6217, first introduced on Sept. 26, 1949, by Chairman John Rankin (D Miss.) of the Committee on Veterans Affairs, was passed by the House on June 5, 1950. There was no objection to the bill. The Senate also passed the measure without objection on Aug. 23. President Truman vetoed it on Sept. 6.

Electronics Laboratory

The Air Force's electronics development laboratory was transferred from Eatontown, N. J., to Griffiss Air Force Base at Rome, N. Y., under the terms of this legislation. The transfer, along with a $3 million authorization to finance it, was first included in the military construction bill (S 2440) passed earlier in 1950 (see Page 304), but was ultimately dealt with separately.

Separation of the transfer project from S 2440 was effected in the House

Armed Services Committee after a successful fight for deletion made by Rep. Harry L. Towe (R N. J.). The House backed up the action on May 23 when S 2440 came before it, and eventually the Senate agreed that the military construction measure should be enacted minus the transfer feature.

Separate Bill

The stage was then set for the introduction of separate legislation authorizing the transfer. Such a bill (S 3727) was offered in the Senate by Chairman Millard Tydings (D Md.) of the Armed Services Committee. At the beginning, S 3727 was entered on the Senate's consent calendar, but failed to pass on two occasions after objections were raised by New Jersey Senators H. Alexander Smith (R) and Robert C. Hendrickson (R), who contended the transfer was not needed in the interests of defense or economy. The New York Senators, Irving Ives (R) and Herbert H. Lehman (D) took exactly opposite stands.

The bill was then shifted to the Senate's regular calendar, and on Sept. 13, was passed on a voice vote. This cleared the bill to the House for action.

House Approves

The House Armed Services Committee approved the bill on Sept. 18 after hearing Maj. Gen. Gordon Saville, deputy chief of Air Force Development, testify that "Rome meets our needs more completely than any other base."

After clearance by the House group, S 3727 was brought up in the House under the unanimous consent procedure because Reps. Towe and James C. Auchincloss (R N.J.), its major opponents, announced they would not object. The House then approved the bill by a 34-13 division vote, sending the measure to the White House where President Truman signed it into a law on Sept. 26 as P. L. 838.

Land Grant Colleges

A Veterans Administration order requiring land-grant colleges to deduct the amount of Federal aid they receive from the amount of money they claim from the VA for teaching veterans was nullified by HR 7057.

The bill, retroactive to December, 1945, provided that funds given land-grant colleges need not be deducted from cost estimates for educational training of veterans studying under the "GI Bill of Rights".

The House passed the bill, sponsored by Chairman John E. Rankin (D. Miss.) of the Veterans Affairs Committee, on March 20 by a 245-101 roll-call vote. The bill was not controversial, but the roll call was needed to achieve a quorum to pass on the measure. Its passage was under the suspension of the House's rules. A two-thirds vote was necessary to effect this.

The Senate passed the bill without amendment and without objection on June 8. The President signed it into law on June 23.

During the House debate, members who opposed the legislation said it would amount to double payment to those land-grant schools now receiving VA payments. They estimated the retroactive provision would cost $12 million at the start. The bill's backers argued that the land-grant funds are granted for special purposes, and if they must be deducted from GI students' bills, the colleges would suffer hardships.

Land-grant colleges started receiving Federal aid in 1862. They now receive a total of about $5,030,000 a year.

Awards To Naval Airmen

S J RES 166—P. L. 476

Feeling ran high in the Congress during April after crew members of a U. S. Navy "Privateer" aircraft lost their lives when shot down over the Baltic Sea on April 8. Senators and Representatives alike blamed Russia for the action.

Although the State Department formally protested to Moscow against downing of the unarmed aircraft, the Senate wanted to go further in expressing its feelings on the subject. On April 19, it passed Senate Joint Resolution 166 authorizing the Navy posthumously to make "appropriate decorations" to the Privateer's personnel "in recognition of their outstanding and heroic services in the performance of duty."

The Senate vote was a unanimous 66-0 ballot. When the measure came up in the House, the lower chamber followed suit, approving the resolution on April 21 by a unanimous tally of 333-0.

President Truman signed the resolution, which then acquired the force of law, on April 24.

Armory Construction

HR 8594—P.L. 783

A bill (HR 8594) authorizing expenditure of $250 million for construction and expansion of armories for the Armed Forces reserve components was approved by both houses after brief debate.

The bill was introduced May 22 by Rep. Overton Brooks (D La.). It called for expenditure of $400 million at the rate of $50 million per fiscal year. Armories would be built entirely with federal funds. Expansion, rehabilitation or conversion of existing armories would be financed by federal funds or on a 75-25 per cent federal-state matching plan.

The bill was reported unanimously by the House Armed Services Committee June 1 after endorsement by the Department of Defense. The House passed it Aug. 15 on voice vote after an amendment by Brooks removed all authorization of funds. Brooks said the outbreak of the Korean war made it inadvisable to spend money immediately on armories.

In the meantime, the Senate Armed Services Committee had approved a companion measure (S 960) June 12. The Senate bill authorized expenditure of $135 million — $35 million in fiscal year 1951 and $50 million in the two succeeding years. The 75-25 federal-state matching ratio was called for in cases where the expansion was made necessary by an increase in strength of a National Guard or an Air National Guard unit. The original Senate bill had called for expenditure of $700 million over a period of several years.

The Senate passed the bill June 16 on voice vote without amendment. On Aug. 21 the Senate took up the House-passed bill, substituted for it the Senate measure and kept the House number.

A House-Senate conference was then held to compromise the two versions of HR 8594. The conference set $250 million for the authorized spending, to be used over a period of five years. The Senate matching provision was retained. The conference filed its report Aug. 30.

The House agreed to the conference report Aug. 31 on voice vote; the Senate did the same Sept. 1. The President signed the bill Sept. 11, 1950, and it became Public Law No. 783.

Port Security

Approved by the President on Aug. 9, this legislation (S 3859) gave him authority to control the anchorage and movement of foreign-flag vessels in U. S. waters, and to tighten up security measures at American ports.

Under the measure the Coast Guard received broad powers to search all foreign vessels entering American waters and to control their movements in U. S. ports. Properly authorized personnel were enabled to remove from non-American ships crew members considered subversive and dangerous to the U. S.

One of the main purposes of the bill was to prevent any present or potential enemy ship from bringing atomic bombs or other destructive weapons into American harbors under the guise of being simply a merchant vessel.

According to Sen. Warren G. Magnuson (D Wash.), who sponsored the legislation, the Coast Guard should have the right to board foreign vessels and make sure they do not carry weapons.

The bill also authorized the FBI to seize anyone found engaging in subversive activity on the nation's waterfronts.

The Senate Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee favorably reported S 3859 on July 21, and the Senate passed it the same day, without debate or controversy. The House Judiciary Committee reported a companion bill (HR 9215) on July 25, but when the House considered this measure on July 27, it decided to pass the Senate's version instead. It did this after making slight changes in the upper chamber's language.

The Senate readily agreed to the House changes on July 28, and this cleared the bill to the White House. President Truman signed it into Public Law 679 on Aug. 9, but did not issue an Executive Order exercising the authority the bill gave him until Oct. 18. At that time, however, he placed U. S. territorial waters and waterfront facilities under virtual wartime security practices.

His Executive Order said in part: "I hereby find that the security of the United States is endangered by reason of subversive activity."

Siberian Trainmen

HR 6277

According to the House Armed Services Committee which favored the bill, HR 6277 was drawn "to grant military status and . . . grant honorable discharges to those remaining members of the Russian Railway Service Corps, which was organized in 1917 and sent to Siberia, at the request of the Russian Government, to supervise the operation of the railroads in that country."

About 128 railroaders, between 62 and 82 years old, would have been affected by this bill. Supporters of the measure said these men were among those who went to Russia in U. S. Army uniform under the impression they were commissioned officers. The Army Department later said the men were civilians and not entitled to honorable discharges and consequent veterans' benefits. Those opposing the bill said the men received more pay than equivalent grade officers, did no fighting and were not sworn in as officers. Similar bills have been before Congress for 30 years and have been passed by the Senate six times.

On Aug. 16, the House voted 91-242 against adopting a rule which would have permitted further debate and action on HR 6277 itself. No further action on the measure was then possible.

The American Legion had opposed the bill in numerous statements submitted to Congress.

Autos for Amputees

Congress approved a bill (S 3768) authorizing the expenditure of $800,000 for automobiles for veterans of World War II who had lost use of one or more feet. The autos were not to cost more than $1,600 each. The bill in effect, extended from June 30, 1950, to June 30, 1951, money available for purchase of autos for eligible amputees.

Sen. Claude Pepper (D Fla.) introduced the bill June 14, 1950. It was approved by the Labor and Public Welfare Committee Aug. 14. The Senate approved it without objection Aug. 23. The House Veterans Affairs Committee reported the bill favorably Aug. 26, and the House passed it on voice vote without debate Sept. 18. The President signed it Sept . 21, and it became Public Law No. 798.

Veterans Hospitals

Restoration of the $237 million cutback of Veterans Administration hospital expansion ordered in 1949 by the President was the purpose of HR 5965. The bill, introduced by Rep. John Rankin (D Miss.), would have directed the VA to go ahead with construction of the 16,000 hospital beds as planned, despite the Presidential order. Contract authority for the hospitals was already provided.

Rankin introduced the bill in 1949 and it was reported by his House Veterans Affairs Committee Aug. 24, 1949. The House passed the measure April 24, 1950. The Senate Labor and Public Welfare Committee, which had held extensive hearings on the subject during March, 1949, approved the Rankin bill Aug. 4, 1950. The measure saw no further action. (For background, see 1949 Almanac Vol. V, p. 495.)

Passes House by Voice Vote

The House April 24 passed the Rankin bill, by voice vote. Rankin said the measure was intended to aid 25,000 veterans who were awaiting hospitalization but who could not get it for lack of facilities.

Glenn R. Davis (R Wis.), one of the few who voiced dissent, called the bill a "political gesture". A Navy veteran himself, Davis claimed every veteran with a service-connected disability was being treated.

When debate was ended, Bernard W. (Pat) Kearney (R N.Y.) offered a motion to recommit the bill with instructions to the Committee to amend it to require the VA to survey abandoned Army and Navy hospitals for their possible use. The recommittal was voted and Rankin reported the bill back to the House immediately with the Kearney amendment.

There were no further amendments, and the bill as amended, was then adopted.

No Senate Action

Sent across to the Senate, the measure was favorably reported by the Senate Labor and Public Welfare Committee on Aug. 4, but received no further action.

GI Schooling Programs

Complaints both from veterans that they were denied educational benefits through a Veterans Administration ruling, and from the VA itself that millions of dollars were being wasted by the Federal government in training ex-GI's at "fly-by-night" schools brought passage of P. L. 610.

The legislation, signed July 13, 1950, tightened up some of the requirements profit-making schools must meet before the government will pay them for training war veterans under the GI educational benefits bill. It also liberalized procedures for most veterans changing fields of GI bill study.

The bill (S 2596) was introduced in 1949 by Sen. Robert A. Taft (R Ohio) following a controversy raised by a VA ruling restricting changes in curriculum by GI students. The Senate passed the bill Oct. 12. Two days later it was reported by the House Veterans Affairs Committee. (See CQ Almanac Vol V, p. 506.)

Before the bill saw further action, however, the President on Feb. 13, 1950, sent Congress recommendations for a tighter check on schools approved for veteran training. The recommendations were based on a VA report citing alleged abuses of the GI training program by some of the new trade schools which it said were mushrooming in many places mainly for the purpose of nicking the VA for tuitions for courses of indefinite standards.

The Senate-passed bill drew further attention on May 11, 1950, when the House substituted for its provisions a bill by Olin Teague (D Tex.), which included most of the President's recommendations.

The Teauge substitute gave veterans more freedom in picking their own courses. It also set up standards for state accrediting agencies. The substitute was passed by voice vote.

A Senate-House conference met to resolve the differences in the two versions. Its report, recommending acceptance of the House version, was filed June 28. The conference-backed bill passed the House June 29, and was approved by the Senate June 30.

S Con Res. 107

Following passage of P. L. 610, the Veterans Administration said some of the revisions in the GI education program which Congress wanted still were not covered in the new law.

Accordingly, Sen. Hubert H. Humphrey (D Minn.) introduced S Con Res 107, which was reported Sept. 12 by the Senate Labor and Public Welfare Committee. It passed the Senate Sept. 13.

The resolution called on the VA to: Recognize private schools, including correspondence schools and intensive short course training, for participation in the veterans program; accept recent tuition charges even if they were higher than ones of prior years; require VA payment for equipment and books used by veteran-students, as long as non-GI students use similar equipment.

Bradley Promotion

Congress approved a private bill (S 4135) raising Gen. Omar Bradley, chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, to the rank of General of the Army.

The bill was introduced Sept. 7, 1950, by Chan Gurney (R S.D.). The Armed Services Committee approved it the following day. The Senate passed the bill without objection Sept. 12, and the House passed it Sept. 14 on voice vote. There was no House Committee action. The President signed the bill Sept. 18, and it became Private Law No. 957.

Abaca Production

On June 16, 1950, the Senate passed legislation (S 3520) drawn to stimulate the production in the Western Hemisphere of abaca, a hard fiber used in the making of cordage. Abaca was in short supply at the time, and enactment of S 3520 was supported by the Senate Armed Services Committee as a defense measure. The Senate group had endorsed the bill on May 19.

After Senate approval, the bill was studied by the House Armed Services Committee, which also endorsed the measure. Reported to the lower chamber on July 18, S 3520 was taken up formally on July 26.

During several hours debate on the measure, Rep. Carl T. Durham (D N.C.) floor manager for the bill and member of the House Armed Services Committee which backed it unanimously, stated that the legislation would set up a revolving fund to finance abaca cultivation. No more than $35 million could be outstanding from this fund at any one time, however. The Reconstruction Finance Corp. would control the money.

The government would support up to 50,000 acres of abaca, grown principally in Central America and the Philippines.

The House then approved the bill by a voice vote, after defeating an amendment offered by Rep. Fred Crawford (R Mich.), to direct into stockpiles some abaca then being sold commercially. Crawford's proposal was defeated 12-58 on a division (standing) vote. However, the House did adopt a minor Committee amendment involving wording, and the measure was sent back to the Senate for concurrence.

The Senate concurred in the House alterations on Aug. 1, which cleared the bill to the White House. President Truman on Aug. 10 signed the measure into Public Law 683.

Lobby Stands

The legislation was supported by representatives of Federal agencies and the cordage industry. These officials stated their support at the Senate Armed Services Committee's hearings on S 3520 on May 17, and at the House Armed Services Committee's hearings June 20 and July 11.

War Effort Studies

The need for keeping tab on all phases of the national war effort resulted in the creation July 27 of a special preparedness Subcommittee of the Senate Armed Services Committee. Among its duties were: To keep a "continuous watchfulness" on the rearmament program, explore bottlenecks and shortages, and to eliminate duplicating investigations.

The Subcommittee consisted of Lyndon B. Johnson (D Tex.), chairman, and Estes Kefauver (D Tenn.), Lester C. Hunt (D Wyo.), Virgil M. Chapman (D Ky.), Leverett Saltonstall (R Mass.), Styles Bridges (R N. H.) and Wayne Morse (R Ore.).

Johnson, in talking to newsmen, said the Subcommittee hoped to accomplish much the same things as was accomplished by the Truman War Investigating committee during the Second World War. His group had already forced some government agencies into speeding up their war effort, he said, pointing out that the General Services Administration had stopped all sale of surplus property which could be used for the fighting in Korea or to help build up the armed forces for any future struggle anywhere in the world.

The principal areas for investigation were expected to be the rubber program, Alaska defenses, steel supplies, ordnance programs, the manpower situation, and foreign cartels as they related to defense supplies.

The Johnson group worked mostly in executive session and through spot investigations by its staff and the Senators. It held few public hearings.

First Report

In its first report, the Subcommittee Sept. 6 took the Defense Department to task in a critical report on the stockpiling program and the general conduct of the Department's preparedness program.

The Subcommittee charged the Department with a "siesta attitude" since the outbreak of the war in Korea. Particularly dangerous, the report continued, was the Munitions Board's attitude on rubber and the synthetic program. Also roughly treated was the "bargain sale" of surplus commodities by the department while buying identical items on the open market not at bargain prices.

"We have found that the government agencies responsible for our rubber supply and stockpile have been slow to adjust their thinking and actions to the realities of the post-Korean world. Menacing events in the Far East are an obvious threat to our natural rubber supply line," the Subcommittee said.

As an example of Munitions Board action since the Korean outbreak, the Subcommittee said, the government was ready to sell a synthetic rubber plant at Akron, Ohio, to private industry until the Subcommittee stepped into the picture. Finally, the report added, the White House ordered the plant readied for production under government control. The report also demanded that the Munitions Board step up research in perfection of synthetic rubber and the feasibility of improving the domestic rubber supply.

The group called for a shakeup of the Munitions Board in order to speed up stockpiling and production of essential war commodities.

Second Report

The Preparedness group's second report Nov. 21 criticized some federal agencies for substituting "paper work preparedness" for performance in the defense program.

The Subcommittee said some public business had been conducted "with less prudence — than would be displayed in operating a charity bazaar".

Singled out for specific criticism were the Munitions Board, Commerce Department, General Services Administration and Air Force. The Subcommittee said the agencies blundered badly in selling war-useful alcohol and gasoline plants as surplus.

The Munitions Board was cited for permitting GSA to sell alcohol plants at Kansas City and Omaha, Neb., and GSA was criticized for making sales. The Subcommittee took the Air Force to task for surplus sales at Robins, Ga., and for buying back for $63,000 aircraft computers that had been sold to a Texas farmer for $6.89.

The Subcommittee recommended re-establishment of the wartime guayule rubber program. The government spent millions on the cultivation and study of the shrub native to arid lands in the Southwestern U. S. but abandoned the program soon after the end of World War II.

In regard to natural and synthetic rubber and synthetic rubber components, the nation's position was "far from satisfactory," the Subcommittee said, and the U. S. was being gouged unmercifully in buying rubber from friendly nations.

Third Report

In its third report, released Dec. 9, the Johnson group said the United States had no wool reserves for the military emergency, and it put the blame on the Munitions Board.

"While the Munitions Board was obviously doing plenty of 'wool gathering', none of it was for a stockpile," said the Preparedness group. The Board's "shortsightedness will cost the taxpayers a minimum of many millions of dollars" since purchases abroad to supplement the domestic supply would cost more than in prior years, the Johnson report stated.

The U. S., faced with the prospect of large military demands, had no wool in stockpiles or inventory and less than enough wool in prospect through domestic production, asserted Johnson. Rapid mobilization, if ordered, "might well result in inadequately clad troops" warned the Subcommittee report. The report also warned about the need of increasing other defense supplies, including turpentine, resin and alcohol.

On-The-Spot Probes

During its preparation of the three reports, the Johnson group went ahead with other phases of its investigation. Study of defenses took part of the group to Alaska where investigators made on-the-spot inquiries. The probe of steel supplies also took some of the Senators out of Washington in their effort to find out what types of steel were in short supply, and why.

The steel investigation brought the statement from Johnson Nov. 2 that a gray market and a shortage of pipe threatened seriously the expansion of oil production. Johnson said pipe was being produced and the Subcommittee intended to find out if anyone was hoarding it for better profit.

Johnson also announced Nov. 4 that the Subcommittee had received complaints from small businessmen and was investigating some phases of the armed services procurement program.

After a closed session of the Subcommittee Dec. 6, Johnson said that manpower was "the No. 1 problem" and that it might be necessary for Congress to pass new legislation to handle it. Next in urgency, he said, was speeding production of guns, airplanes, tanks and similar weapons.

The Chairman said the rubber program, which the Subcommittee reviewed earlier, was underway and that "officials are making headway upon necessary corrections in disposal of defense surpluses" which the Subcommittee recommended.

The Johnson group was to issue further reports on its findings.

Hunt's Subcommittee

Also investigating a phase of the war preparedness picture was a Senate Armed Services Subcommittee on Strategic Materials. After a closed-door session Dec. 4, its Chairman, Lester C. Hunt (D Wyo.), expressed concern over the nation's stockpiles, particularly those of manganese, copper, cobalt and rubber.

He said his group had heard key government officials discuss reserves of war-useful materials. Hunt told reporters that "business as usual is out the window and it doesn't make a damn bit of difference whose business it is". He said nothing could be hurt "by having too much too soon".

GI Training Survey

H Res 474

A nine-man committee of the House was appointed Sept. 20 to investigate alleged abuses in the GI education program.

The group was authorized by H Res 474, passed Aug. 28. On Sept. 21 the House appropriated $30,000 to cover expenses of the investigation.

Rep. Olin E. Teague (D Tex.) was named chairman of the group. Ranking minority member of the committee was Rep. Bernard W. Kearney (R N.Y.), who said upon announcement of the committee's appointment that he was certain the group would find numerous cases of "abuses" that "have and are costing the taxpayers millions of dollars."

Other Committee members were Democrats Joe L. Evins (Tenn.), Clair Engle (Calif.), Earl Chudoff (Pa.), Richard Bolling (Mo.), and Republicans Hubert B. Scudder (Calif.), Alvin F. Weichel (Ohio) and J. Glenn Beall (Md.).

The Teague group opened hearings on Dec. 11. It inquired into statements that many GI school operators also headed business firms that supplied tools and materials to their schools at a profit. Such "arrangements and agreements made between the manufacturers, supply houses and school operators resulted in some detriment to the government in the form of higher costs for tools than would have been necessary," Teague said.

The Committee Dec. 11 heard C. Jeff Jennings, secretary-treasurer of the Texas Trade School, Dallas, and the Southern Trade School, New Orleans, testify that he also was president of the General Trading Corp., Dallas, which sold materials to the schools and billed the Veterans Administration at retail prices after obtaining them from manufacturers or jobbers at wholesale.

Jennings said the corporation was formed in January, 1950, after the C. & E. Marshall Co., Chicago supplier of watchmaking tools, advised that it would be "embarrassing" to continue to sell direct to the schools at a discount of 20 to 33 per cent.

The Committee heard similar testimony from other school operators. George W. Sims Jr., owner of the Terre Haute, Ind., School of Watch Making, said he organized a company in 1948 to supply tools and materials to the school and to professionals in the area.

On Dec. 12, James A. Esser of Tampa, Fla., told the Committee he made about 29 per cent on tools he sold to students of the Tampa Horological School which he operated. He said later contracts with the VA limited his profit on tools to 10 per cent and then eliminated it entirely. He said the Marshall firm was his chief supplier.

John H. Sears, owner of the Sears School of Trades and the Sears Brothers Jewelers Inc., Cleveland, O., said he discussed with VA officers the practice of having Sears Brothers sell tools to the Sears School at a profit.

The witnesses said they had done nothing wrong. Teague said that William M. Lenderman, Dallas, regional VA official, resigned after being served a subpoena to appear before the Committee.

"Collusive Practices"?

Teague said some dealings between schools and suppliers were "perfectly legitimate business transactions" and others "were somewhat akin to collusive practices."

The lawmakers said Dec. 18 that the Justice Department would be asked to investigate carbon copy bids submitted by watchmaking equipment concerns competing for a veterans training school contract.

Teague said the Department's aid would be sought after hearing testimony of J. K. Marshall, president of the C. and E. Marshall Co., Chicago, and Ray C. Wolf, vice-president of the company.

Marshall said he did not know how it happened that the company's bid and that of U. S. Jewelers Supply Co., Chicago, were carbon copies. Wolf said Marshall set up U. S. Jewelers as a distributing company with a Marshall accountant as its president. The bids were submitted to the Waco School of Horology at Waco, Tex., on equipment to be paid for by the Veterans Administration.

Walter Bachus, owner of the Trojan Supply Co., Tyler, Tex., earlier told the Committee his firm submitted a bid to the Waco school but that the Marshall company sent its bid to him before his own was submitted. The VA requires competitive bids from at least three firms.

Rep. Earl Chudoff (D Pa.) termed the transaction a "serious violation of the Sherman Anti-Trust Act."

Testimony of another school head produced a denial from a VA official that pressure had been used against the school.

Eugene H. Rietzke, president of the Capital Engineering Institute, Washington, D. C., Dec. 19 testified that the VA stalled on negotiations and held up tuition payments to his radio trade school after he had complained to a Senate committee about what he called the VA's unfair attitude toward such schools.

E. M. Haddox, regional VA contract officer, denied the charges and said dealings with Capital were conducted just as were those with other schools.

Hearings were to continue into 1951.

Housing Bids

HR 7846 -- P.L. 498

Congress approved without debate a bill (HR 7846) to streamline the method of getting competitive bids on housing projects to be built near military installations. The House passed the bill by unanimous consent April 5,

The Senate did the same April 19 after adding amendments. The House accepted the Senate amendments April 21, and the President signed the bill May 2.

HR 7846 was introduced by Brent Spence (D Ky.), chairman of the House Banking Committee March 24 at the request of the Defense Department. The measure permitted the Defense Department to hire an architect and engineers to draw up plans for housing projects to be built in defense areas pursuant to the Military Housing Insurance Act of 1949. (See CQ Almanac, Vol. V, page 486.) Private contractors would be authorized to submit bids on the specified project. The winning contractor would repay the government the cost of the plans. The bill also authorized the government to acquire options on private sites for proposed projects, the options to be transferred later to the winning bidder.

The Banking Committee approved the bill without amendment March 29 after Defense officials told the Committee that the existing system of requiring each bidder to draw up his own plans was delaying construction of much-needed housing.

The House passed the bill April 5 after one amendment, by Spence, had been adopted on voice vote. The amendment called for lexible plans which would include use of prefabricated parts where possible.

Senate Grants Approval

The Senate Banking Committ proved the bill April 13 with amendments: A ceiling was put on architect and engineer fees; further use of prefabrication was encouraged; and the Defense Department was authorized to arrange contracts so that the government eventually could secure title to the housing projects

The Senate passed the bill by unanimous consent April 19 without further amendment.

The House agreed to the Senate amendments on voice vote April 21, and the President signed the bill May 2. It became Public Law No. 498.

Nominations

Sherman Confirmation

The nomination of Admiral Forrest P. Sherman to be Chief of Naval Operations provoked the sharpest controversy of any nomination in the military and veterans affairs field in 1950. Moreover, it started a fight only a few days after the 81st Congress had reconvened Jan. 3 for its second session.

Sherman's nomination was before the Senate Armed Services Committee. Some members of the group were still irritated at the reason for Sherman's nomination to be CNO in the first place — because Secretary of Defense Louis Johnson had dismissed Admiral Louis Denfeld from the post in October, 1949. Johnson had said at that time that Denfeld was ousted because of the Admiral's views on "unification." (See CQ Almanac, Vol V, page 502.)

Committee

On Jan. 12, 1950, the Senate Armed Services Committee staged a morning session at which the 1949 Denfeld ouster was revived as a controversial issue. In connection with it, the committee voted 5-5, along strict party lines, against the Republicans' motion that Navy Secretary Francis P. Matthews be called for questioning about the Navy controversy. The decision came after an hour and a half of heated exchanges between Chairman Millard E. Tydings (D Md.) and William F. Knowland (R Calif.), spearhead of the move to bring Matthews before the committee.

The committee then completely reversed its formal vote and agreed to call Matthews and Adm. Sherman to testify later in the day. Tydings expressed the hope the afternoon meeting would approve Sherman's nomination without getting into the ouster of Denfeld.

At the Jan. 12 afternoon session, both Matthews and Sherman testified. Matthews surprised the committee by testifying that the term of Adm. Denfeld expired Dec. 15 and that he had recommended against a second two-year term for Denfeld. "I could not have administered the Navy with Admiral Denfeld as chief of naval operations," the Secretary declared.

Adm. Sherman also assured Republican Senators that he had not been grilled about his policies or placed under any obligations when he took over as top naval commander.

After hearing Matthews and Sherman, the Committee decided to report favorably the Sherman nomination. The decision was a unanimous one, and the nomination was immediately sent to the Senate floor for action Jan. 12.

Floor Action

On the floor, however, action was at first blocked by an objection by Sen. Joseph R. McCarthy (R Wis.), who said the matter was so important that all Senators should have a chance to examine the report of the favorable Committee action.

After temporarily delaying action on the Sherman nomination, McCarthy made a speech Jan. 18 in which he sharply questioned not only the 1949 dismissal of Adm. Denfeld but also the truthfulness of Secretary Matthew's testimony in that situation.

McCarthy showed the Senate what he said was a photostat of a commission issued by President Truman for Denfeld's second term as CNO. The Senator, a former Marine, declared that Matthews had erred in telling the Senate Armed Services Committee that no such commission was ever issued.

McCarthy contended that Sherman could not be confirmed as CNO because legally a question existed as to whether the office "is now actually vacant." He declared that President Truman and Secretary Matthews had issued Adm. Denfeld a commission as CNO for two years from Dec. 15, prior to relieving him from duty.

Although Matthews had testified before the Committee that Denfeld had been appointed Aug. 15 and confirmed to a new term beginning Dec. 15, but that his commission had not been issued at the time he was fired in October, McCarthy quoted the Committee hearings to show that Matthews declared "Admiral Denfeld . . . never has been appointed for a second term."

The alleged commission McCarthy produced for the record was dated Sept. 14. Tydings contended Matthews was basically right as Denfeld never actually was sworn in for a new term.

Review Ordered

Chairman Tydings immediately asked the Senate to hold up confirmation of Adm. Sherman, pending a check of the law and precedents on the right of the President to remove a high officer after commissioning him for a new term. Tydings said he hoped he could soon have additional facts for the Senate and that he would offer them "without regard to whom they hurt or help."

Republican members of the Senate committee, who had voted unanimously for Sherman's confirmation and declared they were dropping demands for an investigation of the Denfeld case, insisted that Matthews be recalled for a "full explanation."

Meanwhile, Admiral Denfeld announced Jan. 19 the commission for his second term was "in my possession."

In Omaha, Neb., at the time of the new flareup in the controversy, Matthews flew back to Washington and immediately said: "I am not going to make any statement until I have a chance to check the records, and determine the facts. I know what they are but I want to be sure they are accurate."

Later, in a letter to Tydings, Matthews said that it was true that Denfeld's commission for a second term was delivered to him, but that it was handed to him "irregularly" and thus never was legally "issued."

In addition, McCarthy announced Denfeld would resign his commission as CNO to remove any doubts about the legality of his successor's appointment.

At the same time, the Wisconsin Senator declared that he would, if it were permitted in the Senate, call for the impeachment of Matthews for his conduct in the Denfeld affair. Matthews, McCarthy said, had been untruthful in statements before the Senate Armed Services Committee, was "completely incompetent" and had shown "complete disloyalty" to the Navy.

Tydings staunchly defended Matthews, and declared the entire case was a "sham battle" raised by Republicans to make political capital. He said McCarthy ignored Matthews' explanation and carried on a "pursuit of littleness."

Finally, on Jan. 24, the Senate by unanimous consent confirmed Sherman to be CNO.

Marshall Confirmation

Another military affairs nomination which attracted considerable Senate debate and committee action was that of Gen. George C. Marshall to be Secretary of Defense. When Louis Johnson resigned that post on Sept. 12, President Truman announced that he would appoint Marshall in his place. (The President also asked Congress to exempt Marshall from a ban on military men holding that particular secretaryship. The Congress complied. See page 315.)

The President sent Marshall's formal appointment to the Senate Sept. 18. The Armed Services Committee met on the 19th to question Marshall. William Knowland (R Calif.) asked Marshall's opinion on Formosa, German rearmament, and aid to Spain. Marshall replied that he could not make specific comment on those matters until he had conferred with the Secretary of State and the President.

A long list of questions prepared by George W. Malone (R Nev.) were read to the General. Most dealt with Marshall's past attitude toward Chinese Communists and wartime aid to Russia. Marshall said he was carrying out official policy in his dealings with the Chinese and Russian Reds.

The Committee then approved the appointment 9-2. Knowland and Harry P. Cain (R Wash.) voted against Marshall, but said they were opposed to all military men as Defense Department officials, not specifically Marshall.

The Senate took up the confirmation Sept. 20. Edward Martin (R Pa.) said there was ample precedent for appointment of a military man to the defense cabinet job. He said about one-third of the past heads of the War Department had had military records and that several had been professional soldiers.

The Senate then approved Marshall's nomination by a roll-call vote of 57-11.

Rosenberg Confirmation

The President Nov. 27 nominated Mrs. Anna M. Rosenberg to be assistant secretary of defense. However, her confirmation by the Senate was held up while charges that she had attended Communist gatherings 15 years earlier were investigated.

Her nomination was first approved 9 to 0 by the Armed Services Committee Nov. 29. After the Communist charges were made, however, unanimous consent for Mrs. Rosenberg's confirmation was blocked in the Senate, and the Committee Dec. 5 voted to hold additional hearings.

In closed door sessions the Committee took testimony on the charges, originated by Benjamin Freedman of New York City. Chief witness against Mrs. Rosenberg was Ralph De Sola, who identified himself as a Communist Party member in 1934-37. He said he had seen her at Communist meetings. At a dramatic Committee session Dec. 8, at which she faced De Sola, Mrs. Rosenberg denied the charges. She said the meeting was "the hardest ordeal I've ever gone through in my life."

Two witnesses named by De Sola to back up his charges contradicted his testimony of Dec. 12, Committee members said. They were James McGraw and Isidore Schneider, both of New York.

The Committee checked the Rosenberg FBI file and said it backed up Mrs. Rosenberg's statements.

On Dec. 14 the Armed Services Committee reaffirmed its approval of Mrs. Anna M. Rosenberg's nomination as assistant secretary of defense after deciding that Communism charges voiced against her were "wholly unfounded". Acting Chairman Richard B. Russell (D Ga.) said the Committee discarded all charges of disloyalty as "completely without foundation."

The Committee vote was 13 to 0. In its report on the investigation the Committee said the FBI had found a second "Anna Rosenberg" who admitted membership in a Communist-front group.

A week later, Dec. 21, the Senate confirmed Mrs. Rosenberg's nomination by voice vote.

Walker Promotion

H J Res 556—Private Law 1083

President Truman on Dec. 29 recommended the posthumous promotion of Lt. Gen. Walton H. Walker to be a full general in recognition of his "outstanding accomplishments as commanding general of the Eighth United States Army in Korea" where he "proved himself to be a brilliant military commander, and his indomitable courage was an inspiration to all the troops . . ."

Congress acted promptly. The House passed H J Res 556 making the promotion on Jan. 1, 1951, and the Senate passed it Jan. 2. The President signed it immediately, so that a four-star banner might be displayed when Walker was interred the same day at Arlington National Cemetery. Walker was killed in a jeep accident in Korea on Dec. 23, 1950.
